CORRIE, John, (deceased).—The life of this old pioneer began in Scotland in 1804 and came to a close on his farm in Schuyler County, Ill., March 17, 1891. Leaving his native land when only fifteen years of age, he came to America in 1819 and the same year settled in Lawrence County, Ill., where his marriage occurred and where five of his ten children were born. In 1834 he became identified with Schuyler County, settling in that year in the village of Rushville, where in partnership with John Scripps, he conducted a general merchandise business until 1840. The association was mutually agreeable and the business was all that could be desired from a financial standpoint, but owing to the failing health of Mr. John Scripps, the partners agreed to close out the business. During the same year, 1840, Mr. Corrie purchased 160 acres of heavy timber land on Section 12, Camden Township, only fourteen acres at that time being under cultivation. The remainder of the land was covered with white and black oak trees of large size, some of them four feet in circumference. Mr. Corrie worked industriously to clear the land and prepare it for cultivation, chopping down trees and clearing the underbrush, all of which he was compelled to gather and burn, as in those days no one valued it highly enough to haul it away, even after it was cut. From time to time, as his means allowed, he added adjoining land to his original purchase of 160 acres, until he finally laid claim to 740 acres of as fine land as was to be found in Schuyler County. At the time the family settled in Camden Township wild game of all kinds was plentiful, turkeys being almost as common a sight as chickens are today. It was no uncommon sight to find a drove of from twelve to twenty deer within close range, and prairie chickens by the hundred were seen so frequently as to cause no comment. All of this is now a thing of the past. The birds and other beautiful winged species that then filled the air with their music, have almost disappeared, even the bumble bee now rarely being seen.

John Corrie was one of the leading men of his time and locality, ever on the alert to inaugurate and assist any project that would benefit his fellowman, either directly or indirectly. This was perhaps nowhere more noticeable than in the establishment of a church and school in this neighborhood, to each of which undertakings Mr. Corrie gave liberally of both time and means, and for many years was treasurer of the school in Camden Township. As early as 1820 he united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and throughout his life he put into daily practice the precepts of his faith. His death, March 17, 1891, was mourned as a deep loss to the community in which he had lived for so many decades, for he stood as a link between the days of hardship, privation and trial, and its present prosperity, his life a part of the past which made today's greatness.

The first marriage of John Corrie occurred in 1825 in Lawrence County, Ill., when he was united with Mary Schrader, the daughter of John Jacob Schrader, who was of German descent. Mr. Schrader was a man of unusual accomplishments, being able to speak fluently in seven different languages, and for many years he taught German, French, Latin and English, besides vocal music in Baltimore. In 1845, twenty years after her marriage, Mrs. Mary Corrie passed away, and the following year Mr. Corrie married Cyrrinthia Erwin. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in the faith of which she went to her reward May 14, 1888.

Adam Schrader Corrie, the eldest child of John and Mary (Schrader) Corrie, was born July 7, 1826, and now makes his home on a farm adjoining the old homestead, the latter owned and occupied by John D.—these two brothers being the only living male representative of the parental family. The eldest daughter, Agnes E., born February 4, 1830, became the wife of George W. Irwin, and both died in Littleton Township. Jacob W., born March 17, 1832, died September 8, 1891; Samuel R., born March 10, 1834, died October 24, 1835; Margaret Eliza born November 4, 1836, is the widow of Peter Beals, and makes her home in Chicago. Mary Ellen was born June 6, 1841, and is now the wife of Charles Collins, of Pasadena, Cal. Sarah M., born February 4, 1843, became the wife of B. F. Peterson, but is now deceased. William H. S. and Penelope Jane were twins, born March 23, 1845; the former died when six months old, but the latter lived to maturity, becoming the wife of George R. Hughes, a resident of Indianola, Iowa.

John D. Corrie, the second child in the family, was born in Lawrence County, Ill., February 27, 1828. As he was a child of about seven years of age at the time of the removal to Schuyler County, he well remembers the incidents connected with that event and he never tires of recounting them, as well as other pioneer experiences, to the younger generation of settlers, who in turn are entertained, not with fanciful imaginations but with truthful facts regarding the times and conditions of that period. During the rush to California in 1850, Mr. Corrie was among the number who braved the hardships and dangers of an overland journey, making the trip with four yoke of cattle in one hundred days. With the gold which he had accumulated during his three years mining experience, he returned to Illinois in 1853 and resumed farming on the old homestead. His country's call for able-bodied men during the early days of the Civil War once more interrupted the quiet routine of his rural life and in 1862, he went to the front as a member of Company A, Seventy-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. Among the battles in which he participated may be mentioned Chickamauga, Buzzard's Roost, Kenesaw Mountain, Jonesboro and Nashville, Tenn. At Jonesboro he was wounded three times, twice in one hand and once in the shoulder. In an engagement at Jonesboro, while charging over the breastworks, many of the men in his company paid for their bravery with their lives, and many others were wounded and compelled to go to the hospital. Among the latter was Mr. Corrie, but at the time of Lee's surrender he was sufficiently recovered at Raleigh, N. C., to take his place with his regiment, and from there went to Richmond and thence to Washington, where in the grand review, he participated in the grand pageant which has never been equaled in the history of the country. After being mustered out and receiving his honorable discharge at Chicago, he returned once more to the farm, where up to the present time he has continued uninterruptedly the peaceful life of the agriculturist. His property consists of 250 acres of the land originally owned by his father, and adjoining his lies the farm of his brother, Adam S. As was his father before him, Mr. Corrie is a believer in Republican principles, and votes that party's ticket at all presidential elections. Although well advanced in years he is hale and hearty, and enjoys recounting the events of his long and eventful life. He holds a high place in the esteem of all who know him, and who appreciate him for the qualities of citizenship displayed for over half a century.

COWDERY, Lewis.—One of the finest farms to be seen on Section 25, Birmingham Township, Schuyler County, is that owned and occupied by Mr. Cowdery, which has been his life-time home, for here he was born in a primitive log cabin February 8, 1846. From Vermont, his native State, Roswell Cowdery began to work his way to the Middle West in young manhood, going first to Meigs County, Ohio. While there he was married to Mercy Hoyt, a native of New Hampshire, and on the farm which he owned in Ohio, five of their seven children were born. Some years prior to the birth of Lewis, about 1839, the parents came overland to Illinois, settling in Schuyler County on Section 25, Birmingham Township. During the year previous (1838), two of his brothers, Jacob and Cyrus Cowdery, had settled in Birmingham Township, a circumstance which, no doubt, was a strong influence in inducing Roswell Cowdery to locate in the same township. Jacob finally removed to Missouri, and there died, while the other brother, Cyrus, passed away in Augusta, Hancock County. In 1840 Roswell Cowdery entered 160 acres of land from the Government on Section 25, erecting a log cabin for the shelter of his wife and five children. In this rude structure two children were added to the number, all living to years of maturity, but of this large family, Lewis is the only one now living. Lucinda was the wife of James Compton, and to them were born four children, of whom Mercy Sarah and Alice are the only ones living, two dying in infancy; Mr. Compton is still living, making his home in Augusta, Hancock County. Sarah became the wife of Alexander Walker, and both are now deceased; their four children are, Roswell, Samuel, James and Charles. Royal and Newton were both unmarried. Charles married Miss Henrietta Walker and to them was born one daughter, Eva, who became the wife of Edgar McWharter. Spencer was first married to Miss Lucinda Phillips, who at her death left one daughter, Alice, who married George Witson, and resides in Thompson, Mont., and one son, William, who married Elsie Shanks and lives in Brooklyn. For his second wife Spencer Cowdery married Jane King, and their four children were named Minnie, Mary, Henry and Roswell; his widow still lives on the old home farm.

Personally Roswell Cowdery was a man fearless in speech and action, open and above-board in all of his transactions, and it goes without saying that he was a man well liked by the best element. He was particularly fond of his friends, and was never so happy as when entertaining them in his own hospitable home. Although he was not interested in politics in the sense of desiring to hold office, he was withal an ardent admirer of Republican principles and always voted that party's ticket. To his original pre-emption claim of one hundred and sixty acres he added from time to time as his means would allow until he laid claim to five hundred and eighty acres of fine land all in one body. To each of his children he gave a tract of eighty acres when they reached maturity. During the many years which he had made his home in Schuyler County he had witnessed innumerable changes, he himself bearing a large share in the transformation, and at his death was mourned as a public loss to the community. His wife died in 1886, honored and respected by hosts of friends and acquaintances.

Lewis Cowdery was educated in the subschipping schools in vogue during his boyhood, each pupil paying a percentage of the teacher's salary, and the teacher boarding around in the parent's families. Later he attended the district school and the school in the neighboring city of Brooklyn. As his studies would permit, he assisted in the duties on the home farm, so when his school days were over he was well qualified to take a helpful part in its management. His marriage, April 3, 1869, united him with Miss Mary Meacham, a daughter of Seth Meacham, one of the old pioneers of Brown County, Ill., where her birth occurred. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Cowdery, but two of them, Lyman and Homer, died in childhood. Idell, who was born December 22, 1875, became the wife of Sloan Horney, a farmer on Section 25, Birmingham Township, and they have five children, Vaile, Lewis, Meriba, Laverne and Irene. The youngest child, Arthur, born October 15, 1882, still makes his home with his parents on the old farm. For one year after his marriage Mr. Cowdery made his home with his oldest brother, but as his father and mother wished him to return to the old home and live with them, he acceded to their wishes, the homestead of 220 acres falling to him at their death, this being the express wish of the parents, as he was their youngest child. No allurements of public or official life have ever been able to turn Mr. Cowdery's thoughts away from the duties connected with the care and management of his farm, and as a reward for his devotion to its interests, he has the satisfaction of knowing that he owns one of the finest farms in point of productiveness in the county. Politically he casts his vote in favor of Republican candidates, and in a quiet way does what he can to advance the interests of his chosen party. Both himself and wife are members of the Baptist Church, toward the maintenance of which both contributed liberally, as they do also to all projects, whether religious or secular, calculated to advance the welfare of their home community.

CRANDALL, Fred E.—One of the youngest men in Rushville to conduct an independent enterprise, and by his business sagacity and determination to invest it with the certainty of success, Fred E. Crandall is known to the patronizing public as the owner and proprietor of a successful livery and feed stable since the summer of 1901. Mr. Crandall comes of a family long identified with extensive horse and mule raising, and practically all of the male members have promoted branches of industry at sometime in their lives. There are no better judges of these animals in the State of Illinois, and their knowledge along these lines is frequently drawn upon by those less versed on the subject.

Mr. Crandall was born in Rushville, Ill., October 20, 1883, and is the youngest of the seven children of Byron and Emma (Greer) Crandall, natives of Ohio. Byron Crandall engaged in the harness, carriage, wagon and stock business in his adopted State of Illinois, but he came here with but one dollar in his pocket, settling among strangers who would favor him only as he earned the right to such favor. Locating first in Astoria, Fulton County, to which place he came by way of Beardstown, he sometime later settled in Rushville, and here industry, thrift and constancy of purpose met with their just reward. He had the family fondness for stock, and devoted much of his time to its raising and purchase. Of his children, Harvey is a prominent stock raiser and dealer of Huntsville Township, Schuyler County; Charles E. is a prominent shipper of horses, mules and agricultural implements at Rushville; Guy is engaged in the commission business at Tampa, Fla., and also is extensively interested in the purchase and sale of horses and mules; Belle is the wife of George W. Winters, of Littleton, Schuyler County; Mortimer died at the age of twenty-one years, and at that time was considered one of the best judges of horses and mules, having begun to deal in them when he was thirteen years old; Lillian is the wife of C. C. Young, a real estate and loan agent of Kansas City, Mo.; and Fred E., the present liveryman of Rushville.

Fred E. Crandall is a member of one of the leading families of Rushville, and has been an important factor in developing the stock business in Schuyler County. His livery is well supplied with good horses, modern equipages, and ample facilities for boarding, feeding and storing. He has vehicles of various kinds for sale, and materially adds to his annual income by buying and selling horses and mules. He is a Democrat in politics, and fraternally is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America.

CRASKE, Henry.—For generations the family of which Henry Craske is a representative flourished as agriculturists and tradesmen in Suffolk, the easternmost shire of England, where he was born at Burg St. Edmunds, September 26, 1845. In the same quaint town his father, James Craske, was born in 1798, and the county was also the birthplace of James Craske's father, who lived and died in the land of his sires.

James Craske was the only member of a large family who gave heed to the inducements that invited him from this side of the water. He had received the education and careful home training of the English youth of the middle class, and while still young had married Eliza Clark, who was born at Barton Mills, England, and who, upon her death at Burg St. Edmunds, in 1849, left five children: Sarah, James, Caroline, Elizabeth and Henry. In 1862 Mr. Craske set sail for the United States, and after various changes located permanently at Little Falls, Herkimer County, N. Y. At that time Henry Craske was thirteen years old, and was serving as the apprentice of a man engaged in the dyeing business in his native town. Two years later, having completed his apprenticeship, he joined his father, brothers and sisters in New York State. On April 23, 1866, he located in Springfield, Ill., where he followed his trade until 1868. The latter year found him a resident of Rushville, whence in 1870 he went to Decatur, Ill., returning soon afterwards to Rushville, however, where he since has been engaged in the ice business.

While a resident of New York, on September 5, 1862, Mr. Craske, then seventeen years old, enlisted in the Second Regiment, New York Volunteer Infantry, and served until the close of the Civil War. On December 23, 1865, he married Ellen Maria Jones, a native of Little Falls, N. Y., and a daughter of Elijah and Jane Jones, born in England and New York, respectively. Mr. and Mrs. Craske are the parents of six children, namely: Geneva A., Caroline E., Mamie, Francis C., Harry Barton, Lillian M. and John A. Logan.

Mr. Craske has led an industrious and useful life, and in many ways has contributed to the development of his adopted town. A stanch and unswerving Republican, he has held many local offices, but is best known for his services as a member of the State Board of Equalization from 1885 to 1888. In 1885 he originated the scheme in the Thirty-fourth District of Illinois of electing a Republican Representative to the State Legislature, thus breaking the deadlock which had tied up the General Assembly for months, and affording an opportunity for re-election to the United States Senate of Gen. John A. Logan. Mr. Craske has for years been a member of Rushville Lodge, No. 9, A. F. & A. M., Rushville Chapter No. 184, R. A. M., and Rushville Commandery, No. 56, K. T. He also is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, Security Lodge No. 31, I. O. M. A. and Col. Horney Post, No. 131, Grand Army of the Republic. Mr. Craske is a self-contained, honorable man of business, whose word is unimpeachable, whose fidelity to the public interests is unquestioned, and whose judgment of men and affairs is decidedly trustworthy. He is the possessor of a handsome competence, won solely through his own efforts, and enjoys the esteem and confidence of the best people in the town.

CROZIER, Robert H., a prominent and successful farmer of Rushville Township, Schuyler County, Ill., was born in the vicinity of Pleasantview, in the same township, March 5, 1859, and is a son of Richard and Sarah (Crozier) Crozier, natives of County Tyrone, Ireland. Richard Crozier came to America with his father, Richard, Sr., and the latter's wife, sojourning for a while in Canada, and thence going to New York State and locating at Ithaca. His future wife, Sarah Crozier, accompanied her parents to the United States, the family also settling in Ithaca, and there she was married to Richard Crozier. About the year 1854 the young couple came to Schuyler County, Ill., making their home in Section 35, Rushville Township. In 1856 Richard Crozier moved to Bainbridge Township, buying seventy acres of land, and adding more from time to time, until he became an extensive landholder, owning 500 acres at the time of his death. He was one of the most successful farmers in his locality, and as his family grew to maturity, gave each a fine piece of land. He and his wife had five children, as follows: Helen Augusta, wife of Thomas L. Strong, who owns part of the old homestead; Frederick, born in New York State, who died when about three years old; Robert H.; Margaret F., wife of Roland M. Stover, of Rushville, Ill.; and Annie M., who died in Bainbridge Township at the age of eleven years. Her father died February 29, 1906. He was one of the leading citizens of Bainbridge Township, and a strong advocate and supporter of educational enterprises. In politics, he was a Democrat, and ably and faithfully filled various township offices. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as is his worthy widow, who resides in Pleasantview, enjoying the sincere respect of all who know her, and the serene consciousness of a well spent life. Robert H. Crozier attended the common schools in his boyhood, and remained on the home farm until the time of his marriage. He then bought forty acres of land in Section 15, Bainbridge Township, which in 1900 he sold and moved to his new purchase of 118 acres in Rushville Township. Since then he has made many attractive improvements on the place, especially on the dwelling, and has now a beautiful home, with spacious and substantial barns, and convenient outbuildings for the care of his stock.

On January 30, 1890, Mr. Crozier was united in marriage with Anna M. Acheson, a native of Bainbridge Township, where she was born April 16, 1870. Mrs. Crozier is a daughter of William and Mary (Ward) Acheson, and particulars in regard to her father's life may be found in a biographical record of Alexander Acheson, appearing elsewhere in this work. Mr. and Mrs. Crozier have had four children, namely: Mabel A., born January 1, 1891; Harry Earl, born November 15, 1893, deceased May 8, 1902; Clarice E., born June 11, 1899; and Sarah Elsie, born November 11, 1903. Mr. Crozier is the only one of the Croziers left in Schuyler County. Five brothers of his father moved to Kansas, where all but one died, leaving families.

In politics, Mr. Crozier is a Democrat, and has for many years held the office of School Director. Fraternally, he is connected with the M. W. A., Rushville Camp, No. 308. He is a man of genial disposition, and he and his amiable wife have many friends.

CURRY, Amos L.—The farm upon which Amos L. Curry lives in Section 6, Frederick Township, was the place of his birth. July 25, 1868, his childish troubles, pastimes and small labors, and has been the scene of his subsequent extensive and successful operations as a general farmer and stock-raiser. Davis H. Curry, the father of Amos, was born in Memphis, Tenn., and by trade was a ship carpenter. Coming early to Schuyler County, he settled on the farm now owned by his son, and there died in 1873 while yet the world seemed to hold much of promise and happiness for him. To a many-sided and industrious career he added the service of a military man, enlisting in the navy at the beginning of hostilities, and serving until the close of the Civil War. He was a man of quiet and unostentatious nature, in no sense a politician, but a consistent promoter of Republican principles. Fraternally he was connected with the Masonic Order. Through his marriage to Louise Messerer, daughter of an early pioneer of Schuyler County, there were born to him five children: Burton E., living in Beardstown, and a locomotive engineer for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company; Davis H., Jr., for many years a miner in Nevada, and Superintendent of the Independence Mine, at Cripple Creek, Colo.; Beulah M., widow of Rev. J. W. Knight, a Christian minister, and a resident of Champaign, Ill.; one not named; and Amos L. The mother of this family lives in Frederick Township, having married as her second husband, B. F. Redman, a well-to-do farmer and dairyman.

Until his twentieth year Amos L. lived at home, in the meantime acquiring a fair common school education, a good constitution, and shrewd business sagacity. Upon starting out for himself he worked by the day or month, but in 1887, having abandoned farming he went to Colorado, where he spent a year with not very profitable results in the North Star and Whale mines. Not favorably impressed with the financial advantages of mining, he returned to Frederick Township, and for four years was employed as bridge carpenter by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company. September 13, 1893, he was united in marriage to Minnie M. Reno, a native of Browning, Ill., and daughter of Hon. William C. Reno, a grain dealer in charge of the grain elevators at Browning. Mr. and Mrs. Curry are the parents of three children: Margaret M., born September 3, 1894; Ada L., born July 5, 1896, and Fred E., born August 8, 1898. Mrs. Curry died November 25, 1899, and was sadly missed by her devoted little family and many warm friends. She was a loyal wife and mother, and an active member of the Christian church. September 2, 1902, Mr. Curry was married to Vesta (Ward) Gregg, daughter of Ira and Mary (Taylor) Ward, and born in Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County, April 6, 1876. To their home and hearts Mr. and Mrs. Curry have taken little Ida Burrell, who has lived with them four years, and this is but one of the many expressions of kindness and humanity which have fallen from the lives of this worthy couple.

In 1893, Mr. Curry rented the old farm in Section 6, Frederick Township, containing 292 acres, and here is following general farming and stock-raising, raising large numbers of hogs, cattle, horses and sheep, besides many kinds of general produce. Besides his original farm he owns 112 acres in Section 32, making in all 402 acres, all under a high state of cultivation, with dwellings, barns, out-buildings and general improvements of modern style. In addition to being one of the leading agriculturists in two townships, Mr. Curry is prominent politically, and on the Republican ticket has served as Supervisor for three terms from Frederick Township, at the last election, in 1907, receiving a majority of fifty votes. For four years he was chairman of the committee on roads and bridges, and in this connection has rendered valuable suggestions as to the care and improvement of these public utilities. While not a member of any church, he is a generous contributor to the Methodist Episcopal Church, with which his wife has been connected for many years, and is also a faithful friend of education, and all enlightening agencies. Possessing an interesting and engaging personality, and having great social tact and discretion, Mr. Curry is a general favorite wherever people are gathered together for mutual entertainment, and is especially popular in the lodges of the Modern Woodmen of America, Knights of Pythias, and D. O. K. K. Within the limits of Schuyler County there is not a man more highly respected, or whose word is more readily accepted than is that of Amos L. Curry.

CURRY, William Jackson, one of the oldest and most highly esteemed farmers of Schuyler County, Ill., residing in Section 31, Buena Vista Township, and long a leading citizen of his community, was born in Mercer County, Ky., January 1, 1839. He is a son of Matthew and Nancy (Simpson) Curry, natives of Kentucky, and a grandson of James and Honora (Booth) Curry, of whom the former was born in Ireland, coming to the United States in the beginning of the last century, and making his way to Kentucky. There Grandfather Curry was married to Honora Booth, and settled in Mercer County, where the rest of his life was spent. Some time after his death his son Matthew journeyed from the Blue Grass State to Illinois, locating in Brown County, and living there from 1842 to 1844. In the latter year he went back to his old home, where he remained until 1849, returning then to Illinois, and bringing his wife's mother with him to Schuyler County, where he located in Woodstock Township. In 1851, Matthew Curry made an overland trip to California, staying until 1853. On his return he spent a short time in Schuyler County, and then went to Missouri. When he came back to Illinois he located again in Brown County, moving to Schuyler County in 1861. He died at the home of his son James, at Cooperstown, Brown County, in 1862, his wife surviving him many years, and finally passing away in Schuyler County at the home of James Curry, in 1888. Their family consisted of five sons and three daughters, as follows: Henry Clay, James, William Jackson, Sarena A., John W., Sarena, Matthew T., and Mary Jane. Henry Clay Curry went to California in 1853, and from there to Oregon, where he spent his last days. James Curry, who is a retired farmer, living in Rushville, Ill., was a soldier in the Civil War, serving in the Tenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, three years. Sarena

A., resides in East St. Louis, Ill., and is the wife of Asa Kent. John W., who was also a member of the Tenth Illinois Cavalry, died at Pilot Knob, Mo., and was buried at Cooperstown, Brown County. Saraba is a widow living at East St. Louis. Matthew T., whose home is at Beardstown, Cass County, Ill., served during the Civil War in the Nineteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was honorably discharged in 1865. Mary Jane was the wife of James White, and died in Missouri, in 1906.

In boyhood William J. Curry attended the common schools, spending his early youth in the manner common to farmers' boys. At the age of seventeen years he cast his first presidential vote for James Buchanan without being challenged! Later he learned the cooper's trade, which he followed until the spring of 1861. On May 24th of that year, he enlisted in Company E, Sixteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving three years. In the engagement at Edgefield, Tenn., he was wounded and laid up in the camp hospital, but soon recovered and reported for duty. On the termination of hostilities he returned to Illinois, locating in Vermont, Fulton County, which was then the home of his mother. There he was engaged at the cooper's trade, working thus until 1865. For two years he was employed on the steamboat, "Progress," running between LaSalle and St. Louis. Then he changed his location to Woodstock Township, Schuyler County, where he followed farming and coopering some time. Subsequently, he spent some time in Iowa, returning from there to Woodstock Township, and remaining there until 1880. In that year he went to Missouri, staying nine months in that State, and then coming to Buena Vista Township, Schuyler County, Ill., purchasing 100 acres of land in Section 31. In January, 1881, he sold sixty acres, retaining forty acres as his home. He has been a very energetic, thorough and successful farmer, but has now practically retired from active business pursuits. He has always taken a prominent part in all measures pertaining to the development and prosperity of his township, and has been recognized as one of its leading citizens.

On May 31, 1866, Mr. Curry was united in marriage with Emma Avery, daughter of William and Margaret Avery, who came to Illinois from Ohio, and were among the pioneer settlers of Schuyler County. Both of the parents of Mrs. Curry are deceased. Eight children resulted from this union, as follows: Rosa, Eva, William, Julius (deceased), Nida E., Estella, Myrtle, and Alec. Rosa is the wife of Robert Walker, a farmer in Camden Township, Schuyler County, and the mother of three children; Eva married Jordan Miller, of Beardstown, Cass County, Ill., and has three children; William is a resident of Camden Township, and is the father of four children; Nida became the wife of Thuren Noval, and is living at the parental home, having two children; and Estelle was married to Henry Agans, a farmer in Camden Township, and has six children. The grandchildren of Mr. and Mrs.

Curry number twenty, and their great-grandchildren, three.

In politics, Mr. Curry has always been a Democrat, taking an active interest in the success of his party, and being influential in its local councils. He has twice been elected Assessor of Buena Vista Township. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the I. O. O. F., having become a member of that order in 1866. He belongs to the Grand Army of the Republic Post, of Rushville. In religion, he and his wife adhere to the faith of the Latter Day Saints. Both enjoy the respect and esteem of a large acquaintance.

CURTIS, Frank P.—Three generations of the Curtis family have contributed to the agricultural and general upbuilding of Brooklyn Township, Schuyler County, and at present there are various representatives in this section of the State, the best known being Frank P. Curtis, who was born here March 21, 1861, and whose whole life has been spent in Brooklyn Township. William Henry Curtis, father of Frank P., was born on a farm in Clay County, Tenn., and as a lad of six years, came with his father, James Curtis, to Illinois, settling during the summer of 1842 in Brooklyn Township, where the balance of his life was spent. James Curtis was a man of strong character and keen appreciation of duty, and when the strife between the North and South culminated in the Civil War, he and six of his sons, tendered their services to the Union army. He became a member of Company K, in the Seventh Missouri Cavalry, and served until the disbandment of the regiment. His son Jesse, after more than three years service as a soldier, was mustered out of Company A, Seventy-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, June 7, 1865, and is now deceased; John Curtis was a member of the same company, and received his discharge on the same day, later dying at his home in Brooklyn Township; Henry W., also a soldier in Company A, and serving the same length of time, was wounded in the battle of Jonesboro, September 1, 1863, from the effects of which he died in 1878; Joseph Curtis enlisted first with his father in the Seventh Missouri Cavalry, and later in the same regiment with his brothers, receiving a gunshot wound at Kenesaw Mountain, finally dying at his home in Brooklyn Township, February 11, 1907; Jefferson also served during the war, and still survives, a resident of St. Louis, Mo.; and James served in Company A, Seventy-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, being wounded at Kenesaw Mountain. The military record of this family is unique, as in the history of warfare in America, few fathers have fought with six sons, for the same length of time, and all survived the conflict. The fact is the more remarkable, as the original sympathies of the family were Southern, yet they left their hard home tasks and donned the accoutrements of the Union soldier, thus testifying to their appreciation of the sublime ideals of the Great Emancipator. James Curtis had also two daughters, of whom Elizabeth is the deceased wife of Louis Frakes, also deceased; and Mary J. is the widow of Harlin Dixon, and lives in Kansas.

Frank P. Curtis is the third in order of birth of the four children of William Henry and Lydia (Wiley) Curtis, the other children being Charles and Louise, deceased, and Edward, a resident of St. Louis. The mother of the family is still living in Brooklyn. Frank P. had the average advantages of farm boys, and like all of the paternal family, has a strong constitution and great capacity for industry. In 1882 he was united in marriage to Mary S. Mason, a native of Brooklyn Township, and daughter of Aden G. Mason, a pioneer of Schuyler County. For seven years after his marriage Mr. Curtis lived on a tract of land south of Brooklyn, but later located in Littleton Township, whence he removed to his present home in Section 10, Brooklyn Township, where he conducts general farming on a scientific basis, and with commendable success. To himself and wife have been born two children, of whom Jesse A. married Jessie Legg, a farmer of Littleton Township; and Charles G. who is at home. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Mr. Curtis is a Republican in politics. He is an upright and intelligent farmer, an obliging neighbor, and a friend who may be trusted and depended on in times of trial as well as of good fortune.

DACE, Wilbur M.—In no profession open to the present are there larger mechanical and artistic possibilities than that of dental surgery. What already has been accomplished is but the nucleus of the knowledge of the student of a few years hence, for with the growing appreciation of dentistry as a factor in health and good appearance, the dentist's opportunities for self-development are limited only by his own ability and resourcefulness. It is in this spirit of progression and constant research that Dr. Dace pursues his calling in Rushville, where he is one of the most enthusiastic of the town's array of professional men and the recipient of a large patronage, much of it being attracted from the adjoining country.

Dr. Dace was born in Ripley, Brown County, Ill., December 22, 1873, a son of Henry M. Dace, born in the State of Missouri, and grandson of Dennis Dace, a native of Illinois. His mother, formerly Katherine Delapp, was born in Illinois, and a daughter of John and Kate Delapp. While still young Dr. Dace moved with his parents to Rushville, where he was educated in the public schools, and graduated at the Rushville High School in the spring of 1893. In the fall of the same year he entered the Dental Department of the Northwestern University, at Evanston, Ill., and during his vacation came to Rushville and practiced in the office of Dr. Bettorf. At the expiration of the three years' course he was given a diploma, and at once entered upon an independent practice in Rushville. At present he is located in the Dace Building on the north side of the square, where he has large, well ventilated and handsomely furnished apartments, equipped with the latest appliances known to the profession, and with books, periodicals and comfortable surroundings for those awaiting his attention.

On September 19, 1901, Dr. Dace was united in marriage to Fredericka Mead, a native of Huntville, Ill., and a graduate of the high school of that place. Their only child is named Dorothy Mead. Dr. Dace is a Democrat in politics, and fraternally, is connected with the Knights of Pythias. He is a careful investigator and a diligent worker, keeping abreast of the best researches already made in dental science, and in a position to avail himself of the wonderful improvements which have marked the advance of the art during the past few years. He makes a specialty of crown and bridge work, in which he has been especially successful, and his general skill, together with a genial manner and tactful, sympathetic nature, insures him all of the patronage to which he can do justice, adhering to his standard of thorough, painstaking and lasting work.

DARNELL, Hon. John M.—A representative of that class of agriculturists who combine the scientific pursuit of their calling with meritorious interest in the political and general welfare of the community in which they live, Hon. John M. Darnell is recognized as one of the best known stock-breeders and authorities in the State of Illinois, as the original introducer of Hereford cattle into Schuyler County, as a merchant of extended and successful experience, and as a legislator who thoroughly understood the needs and promoted the best interests of the county of which he is a native son, having been born on the farm which he now owns and occupies in Section 6, Frederick Township, August 4, 1843.

In its evolution from the condition of a backwoods region, Schuyler County has had the continuous support of the Darnell family. Pioneering has been a conspicuous tendency of those bearing the name ever since the arrival on American shores of the first Darnell, who, presumably, settled in Virginia, where Henry Darnell, grandfather of John M., was born in 1767, on the shores of the Potomac River. Henry Darnell enlisted in the Revolutionary War at the age of fifteen years, and was present at the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown. He grew to manhood in Virginia, and when twenty-five years old, married Elizabeth Lee, also born in Virginia, and who became the mother of nine children. Of these, Jesse M., father of Hon. John M., was born October 4, 1813. The family eventually located in the wilds of Ohio, settling in Wayne County, where the father died and whence Jesse removed in 1831 to Henderson County, Ill. In 1833 he removed to Warren County, and in 1834 to Schuyler County, where he engaged in the manufacture of fanning mills. His business grew apace, and while conducting it he roomed and boarded at the home of his future wife, Louise Utter, daughter of Lyman Utter. The ancestors of the Utter family came from Scotland, settling in the colony of New Amsterdam, which became New York after the capture by the English. Born to Mr. and Mrs. Darnell were four children, three of whom are living. Louise is the wife of Mr. Nelson, of Santa Barbara, Cal.; James K. spends his winters in Seattle, Wash., and his summers in mining in Alaska; and John M. is the subject of this sketch. Jesse Darnell gained much prominence in Schuyler County, becoming not only a comparatively wealthy farmer, but representing his district in the State Legislature in 1848-49. He was elected on the Democratic ticket, and during his term was one of its most capable and forceful legislators. At the time of his death, he was the owner of 340 acres of land, and the recipient of the respect and good will of all who knew him.

Educated primarily in the district school near his home in Frederick Township, John M. Darnell, in 1862, entered Lombard College, near Galesburg, Ill., at the end of two years going to Ann Arbor College, Mich., where he completed the four years' course in three years, graduating with high honors in the class of 1867. Returning to the home farm, he remained there continuously until 1880, in that year engaging in the hardware business in which he continued until 1888. Disposing of this business, which, in the meantime, had grown to prosperous proportions, he again located on the farm, and at the present time owns 300 acres in the county, all of it improved and very valuable. Few properties in the county present a more modern or thoroughly up-to-date appearance, and certainly no expense has been spared to convert it into a model of neatness and productiveness. For twenty years the owner has been extensively engaged in breeding Hereford cattle, the breed of which was introduced by him into the county, and no finer animals were to be found anywhere between the oceans. His first importation in the early 'seventies included an animal for which he paid $1,000, unquestionably the largest price up to that time paid for an animal of its kind from England. Mr. Darnell continued to take prizes and lead in the breeding of Herefords in Schuyler County until January 1, 1907, when he sold the last of his stock, and since has practically retired from stock-breeding. His wide experience and exhaustive knowledge of stock has led to many distinctions being conferred upon him, and his advice for many years has been sought and followed. In 1899 he was appointed by Governor John R. Tanner a member of the Live Stock Commission, and during his three years of service, proved one of the most useful members of the Commission.

Mr. Darnell has been prominent in Democratic politics for many years, and in 1872 was elected a Representative in the State Legislature, and in 1884 to the State Senate, serving a four years' term. Fraternally he is a member of the Masonic order. Broad-minded and enterprising, far-sighted and public-spirited, his career has touching many sides in the development of his county, and invariably has tended to an elevation of business and moral ideals, and to political soundness and utility.

DAY, Richard.—It was a pleasure to feel the hearty hand-shake and hear the cheery voice of so good and amiable men as Richard Day, and it is a pleasure to write about him. He was among the quiet and unobtrusive of life's workers, yet he was a thorough master of an occupation which has interested the race since the beginning of time, which possesses a paramount creative quality and the absorbing element of great and even absorbing usefulness. In the companionship of carpenter's tools he found his greatest delight and most practical reward, and from the time of his arrival in July, 1849, until the close of his life, December 22, 1905, he bent his energies to erecting houses, barns, and general buildings throughout Schuyler County, many of which formed the basis of important agricultural activities, and remain intact and usable after the lapse of almost half a century.

Mr. Day was descended from farmers and mechanics, and in his veins flowed the blood of an old English ancestry. His birth occurred in the little town of Norton, Norfolkshire, Eastern England, June 27, 1825, and in early youth he learned the carpenter trade from his father, George Day. He was reared also to farming as practiced in his native country, but the farm was a small one, as are all in Norfolkshire, owing to the innumerable marshes and fens along the shores of the North Sea. When all on this side of the ocean was in a turmoil over the discovery of gold on the Pacific coast, Mr. Day left his quiet home and sailed for America, arriving in St. Louis, in March, 1849, and remained there until coming to Schuyler County in the following July. He settled on what now is the homestead in Oakland Township, and continued to make this his home for the rest of his life, going into the surrounding country to follow his occupation as a builder for a part of each year.

The first wife of Mr. Day in maidenhood was Ann Booth Downing, whose death occurred in 1853. In 1856 he married Martha E. Garret, who died in 1883, and January 20, 1884, he was united in bonds of matrimony to Mrs. Artemisia (Ackman) Walker, a native of Kentucky and daughter of Isaac and Nancy (Herman) Ackman, early settlers of Rushville Township. James Walker, the first husband of Mrs. Day, was born in Norfolk, England, and came to Schuyler County, Ill., in 1850. His parents, Stephen and Emily (Fletcher) Walker, settled on a farm in Rushville Township, where the father died, the death of the mother occurring in Parsons, Kan. After her marriage Mrs. Walker settled with her husband on the farm which ever since has been her home, and where Mr. Walker died February 18, 1882. He was a public spirited and very capable man, a staunch Republican, and the holder of many important local offices. He was active in church and school work, a member in good standing of the Methodist Episcopal Church and a generous contributor to worthy charities. Mr. and Mrs. Walker were the parents of six sons and three daughters: James F., a farmer of Oakland Township, Schuyler County; Stephen, also a farmer of Oakland Township; Charles, occupying the old Walker farm; Lewis, a resident of Pittsburg, Kan., husband of Jesse G. (Robinson) Walker, and father of Paul Walker; Margaret, wife of George Baughman, of Pittsburg, Kan.; Nancy, wife of Robert Morris, of Ray, Ill.; Nellie, wife of Charles Sloane, of Ottumwa, Iowa. To Mr. Day and his third wife were born Richard Maurice, who married Mary Ellen Sargent, and farms in Littleton Township, and James, a farmer of Schuyler County. Of the other marriages of Mr. Day there were six children: Mrs. Costello; Mrs. Holson; George Edward; Richard Albert; James William and William Harrison.

DEAN, David, (deceased), former retired citizen of Rushville, Schuyler County, Ill., was born at Kellybegs, County Donegal, Ireland, September 14, 1828, spending the first twenty-four years of his life in his native country, where in his youth and mature years, he was engaged in farming and sheep-raising. Coming to America in 1852, he was employed for the next ten years as foreman of the yards of the Pennsylvania Railroad at Pittsburg. In 1859, he was married at Rushville, Ill., to Katherine Montooth, whose parents were also natives of County Donegal, Ireland, coming to Illinois in 1851 from Pittsburg, which they made their first home after leaving their native country. Mr. and Mrs. Dean came to Schuyler County in 1861, settling in Oakland Township, which continued to be their home until 1902, and where they reared a family of eight children, six boys and two girls—two other boys dying in infancy. Purchasing eighty acres of land in Oakland Township, Mr. Dean began farming on a small scale but finally became the owner of 500 acres in one body. After a successful career as a farmer, he removed to Rushville with his family, where he erected a pleasant home during the following year and there spent the remainder of his life in comfortable retirement. His death occurred suddenly, at his home in Rushville, September 27, 1907, as the result of heart-failure, just as he was sitting down at the table for his evening meal.

In infancy Mr. Dean was baptized into the Episcopal Church, and while a resident of Pittsburg, was a communicant of St. James Episcopal Church of that city, but on coming to Illinois became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Of a singularly happy disposition and plain, unassuming manners, a life of strict integrity and his upright Christian character won for him a large circle of appreciative friends.

Of the eight children born to Mr. and Mrs. Dean, James died at the age of eighteen months and Jesse aged two and a half years. Of the six children still living, George H. married Elizabeth Stanbanch, has four sons and two daughters and is engaged in farming in Eldorado Township, McDonough County; William R., married Inez Wetzel, has one son and one daughter, and is a farmer near Astoria, Fulton County; Effie B., is the wife of Joseph Rose of Canton, Ill., and has four daughters and one son; John married Sadie Rose, has two sons and two daughters and is a farmer in Rushville Township, Schuyler County; Lawrence married Nellie Wetzel, has three sons and one daughter and is engaged in farming near Browning, Ill.; Herbert and Samuel are on the old home place in Oakland Township. David Dean was a Republican in politics and, at the time of his decease, left an estate comprising 740 acres of land, besides his pleasant new home now occupied by his worthy widow. The following tribute to Mr. Dean from a member of his family is worthy of reproduction here:

"The writer has often felt his heart deeply touched at the sorrows of others when grieving at the loss of a parent, but it was a new revelation to us that evening when our dear father went away to the better land. Though by his toil and frugality he had accumulated a goodly heritage, yet to his children the memory of those sacred hours around the family altar, his pure and blameless life, his wise counsel and his sacrificing love, are the most precious legacies that he could have left us. He dearly loved his home, and as the infirmities of age grew upon him, he had an intense longing to have his children near him and his home was like heaven to him when he could have them about him.

"But the voice we loved to hear is hushed forever. No more shall he greet us with his genial smile of welcome, nor ever again shall we feel the warm grip of his great hand. The vacant couch, the empty chair, the unused cane, are mute witnesses that he no longer lives among us. . . . The last earthly service that we could render him was to bear him to the beautiful cemetery where we left him to the guardian care of the holy angels. Farewell, dear father, until we meet in the morning!

"One less at home!

The charmed circle is broken; a dear face.
Missed day by day, from its accustomed place;
One voice of welcome hushed, and evermore
One farewell word unspoken; on the shore
Where parting comes not, one soul landed more.

One more in heaven,

One less at home!

A sense of loss that meets us at the gate;
Within, a place unfilled and desolate;
And far away, our coming to wait,
One more in heaven!"

DEAN, Elias.—The progenitor of the Dean family in America was an Englishman, whose craving for religious freedom led him to abandon his native land and sail with that intrepid company which since has been immortalized in song and story as the Pilgrims of the Mayflower. The immigrant Dean laid the foundation of his colonial fortunes in Virginia, and one of his successors, the great-grandfather of Elias Dean, the latter a farmer of Birmingham Township, Schuyler County, Ill., followed the martial fortunes of Washington during the Revolutionary War. His son left his peaceful fields in Virginia and enlisted in the War of 1812. John Dean, son of the soldier of 1812, and father of Elias Dean, also was born in Virginia, and married Catherine Heavenor, daughter of Nicholas Heavenor, of West Virginia, the latter a native of Germany. To John Dean and his wife were born fifteen children, of whom Elias, the third youngest, was born in Lewis County, W. Va., April 11, 1839. Of the other children in the family, Nicholas died at the age of ninety-three years; William attained to the same unusual age; Julian, Mary, Matilda, Elizabeth and Malinda are deceased; Eliza, now sixty-four years old, is the wife of Allen Keisling, of Virginia; Jacob Marshall lives on the old Virginia homestead; Solomon lives in Buchanan, Va.; John is a farmer of Hancock County, Ill.; George is a farmer of Upshur County, Va.; Jacob farms on the old homestead on the old Virginia homestead; Elias is the farmer of Birmingham Township, Schuyler County; and Perry, of Weir, Kan., served during the Civil War in the Upshur County Battery. John Dean staunchly supported the Union during the Civil War, and ever was on the side of the unfortunate and oppressed wherever found. His heart reached out to the need of all mankind, and he would share his last cent or sack of flour with one who needed it more than himself. He was an ardent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, held some office therein, and contributed generously towards its charities and general support. Throughout this part of the country he was known as "Uncle John," and was much beloved by children and frequently consulted by the older class.

The early subscription schools afforded the first educational advantage to Elias Dean, his father paying so much a year for the schooling of each of his many children, usually from three to four dollars a season. He helped on the home farm until his sixteenth year, when there returned to Schuyler County his uncle Jacob, who had made a comfortable living in Iowa, and was much enthused over the prospects in that State. In 1856 Elias went to Iowa with his uncle, and near Burlington found work on a farm at ten dollars a month for two years. In 1858 he came back to Schuyler County and worked for fourteen dollars a month, and while taking advantage of the small social diversions afforded in the neighborhood, met Miss Electa T. Graham, daughter of Wm. W. Graham, whom he married August 16, 1860. The young people set up housekeeping on a farm owned by Mrs. Dean's father in Section 22, Birmingham Township, and about 1892 purchased 400 acres of land in Section 14, the same township, making, in all, with the 520 acres in the first farm, 920 acres. Of the first farm he gave his son a quarter-section, sold to Peter Greenleaf 200 acres, and bought 140 acres in Section 14. Upon the 400 acre farm he had, at the time of the panic of 1893, 140 head of blooded cattle, for which he was obliged to buy corn in Nebraska for feed, and the price dropped down until he sold his stock outright for three cents a pound. This farm Mr. Dean sold, but he now owns 340 acres of as fine land as the county contains, well stocked and improved, and equipped with well constructed and capacious buildings. It is an ideal home and farming property, practically insuring good returns each succeeding year, and netting its owner a large surplus over even the most unexpected demands.

To Mr. and Mrs. Dean have been born the following children: John Franklin, who is married and has five children—Robert F., Nellie, Myrtle, Eltha and Harry, and who farms near the old homestead; Mary E., deceased at the age of sixteen years; Catherine, wife of John E. Moon, a farmer of this township, and mother of four children—Bessie, Iva, Jacob J. and Ervin Elias Moon; Charles S., married to Lona Matheny, and has four children—Ethel, Raymond, Mark, and Paul; George, married to Ona Matheny, and has five children—Roscoe, Elmore, Alma, May and Hazel; Hattie, wife of Leander Holdcroft, and mother of Albert, Floyd, John and Electa E., and three children who died in infancy. Mr. Dean cast his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln, and he ever since has supported the Republican party, notwithstanding the fact that he was born in the South, and had absorbed its spirit and traditions. He is socially a member of the Union League, and his wife is identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church. The idea of progress and stability have guided the endeavors of Mr. Dean ever since he began to work by the month for the modest sum of ten dollars. When he first began an independent life he had no money to buy harness for his horses, and was obliged to fashion this necessary article out of pieces of rope. During the day time he would grub stumps, cut down timber and burn brush at night. He has come the long way possible only with true determination and grit; and yet his life has by no means been a self-centered one, but has reached out to influence and help all with whom he came in contact. He is what is known as a "good mixer," a genial, sociable and sympathetic gentleman, and he has greatly benefited the township while serving as School Director and Road Commissioner.

DEANE, Judge Hudson M., better known among his intimates, and by the general public in Schuyler County, Ill., as "Hud" Deane, is one of the leading citizens of the town of Frederick, Schuyler County, which has been his home (except during a short absence) for more than half a century. He was born in the city of New York August 2, 1833. At an early age he removed to Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and there received a liberal education. After completing his studies, he accepted a position as clerk in a wholesale dry goods establishment in New York City, and, at a later period, discharged the duties of a similar connection in Albany, N. Y., for two years. Returning then to New York City, he resumed work in the concern where he had first been employed. A short time after he attained his majority (in 1855), he met Maro Farwell of the firm of Farwell & Co., Frederick, Ill., who was on a visit to the eastern metropolis for the purpose of purchasing goods for the store then conducted by them in Frederick, and was induced by the latter to accompany him on the homeward journey, and to enter their employ. On April 2, 1855, he commenced work in the Farwell store, continuing thus until 1858. In the latter year, he embarked in the mercantile trade under the firm style of H. M. Deane & Co., but in 1859, sold out the business. In 1861, Mr. Deane assumed charge of the Schuyler Hotel in Frederick, changing its name to the Deane House. Later, he withdrew from the management of this place on account of ill-health, and after an interval of one year (in 1867) went to Macomb, McDonough County, Ill., where he was proprietor of what had formerly been the Brown Hotel. The name of this he also changed to the Deane House, making many alterations and improvements in the establishment. There he remained nearly two years, when he returned to Frederick and there conducted the Hotel Deane until March, 1902. In that year he sold the hotel property, and retired from active business responsibilities. He maintains an office, however, attending to legal matters and pensions, as well as loans, real estate and insurance. He is still agile and sprightly at the age of seventy-four years, and as genial in temperament and cordial in manner as in the most vigorous days of his prime. During his long career as a public entertainer he became exceedingly popular, and no man is more widely and favorably known in Schuyler County than "Hud" Deane. Mr. Deane has accumulated considerable financial means, and is now in possession of a handsome competency, being the owner of 195 acres of very desirable land in Frederick Township, besides several pieces of improved property in the town of Frederick. Apart from the twenty months spent in Macomb, he has lived continuously in Frederick since 1855, and his face and figure are familiar to all of its people. He has always manifested a creditable public spirit, and has been a diligent and useful member of the community. On his first arrival in Frederick the business affairs of the town were in a lively condition, as it was the freighting point for nearly all the villages within a radius of forty miles. Then, all the goods sold in Macomb were hauled from Frederick.

On February 17, 1859, Mr. Deane was united in marriage with Elizabeth Messerer, a daughter of Anthony Messerer, who was one of the most highly respected among the pioneer settlers of Schuyler County. The father of Mrs. Deane was a native of Germany, and came to the United States early in the last century locating in Schuyler County about the year 1827. He was the first man elected to represent the village of Frederick, on the board of Township Supervisors, after the organization of Frederick Township, and held that office many years, being the incumbent at the time of his death. Seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Deane, four of whom died in infancy. A son, Will McGeorge Deane, who was born in Macomb, Ill., September 28, 1868, was drowned July 10, 1879; Loulena May, a daughter, is the wife of Charles E. Causey, residing in Peoria; and Stella W., another daughter, married Walter J. Severns, of Bushnell, Ill., and has one son, Deane J. Mrs. Deane, who was a woman of many graces, was possessed with most excellent traits of character, died March 3, 1902.

Politically, Mr. Deane is a lifelong Democrat, and has been very prominent and influential in the local affairs of his party. He has attended nearly all the Democratic State and County Conventions for many years, and has filled various township offices with credit to himself and with the commendation of his constituents. At one time, he held eleven positions by commission and appointment. He was successively Assistant Postmaster and Postmaster of Frederick, his service in both capacities covering a long period. For nearly thirty years, he discharged the duties of Coroner of Schuyler County, and acted as Deputy Sheriff fourteen years. He had an extended experience as Justice of the Peace, his incumbency in that office covering a period of thirty-six years, in which time he became versed in legal routine and performed the marriage ceremony on nearly five hundred different occasions. In fraternal circles, he is identified with the K. of P., Lodge No. 207, Beardstown, Ill., in which he has passed through all the chairs, including that of Chancellor Commander. He is also affiliated with the Knights of the Maccabees of the World, in which he has likewise passed through all the local chairs. In the sunset period of life, "Hud" Deane enjoys the unreserved confidence and hearty good wishes of the entire community in which his busy and useful career has been spent.

DE COUNTER, Samuel.—A lifelong resident of the locality which is still his home, and still in the days of his prime, one of the most vigorous, successful and useful characters of Schuyler County, was born in Ripley (once a part of Woodstock) Township, Schuyler County, Ill., October 4, 1827. He is a son of Peter Frederick and Nancy De Counter, natives of France. His father was a soldier in the Napoleonic wars, and was with Bonaparte when the great Emperor was captured. Having effected his escape, the subject of this sketch immediately came to the United States, landing at New Orleans. After teaching school there for awhile he went to St. Louis, and then to Boone's Lick, Mo., where about the year 1823 he was married to Nancy Scouts, a lady of Scotch-German descent. In the spring of 1827 they came to Illinois, settling in Schuyler County, in the southeast quarter of Section 33, Woodstock Township. Peter F. De Counter cleared and cultivated a well conducted farm in moderate extent, on which he remained until the time of his death, in 1855, his wife having passed away in 1833. They were the parents of two children, Jeanetta and Samuel. The former married Jonas Albert, by whom she had three children, as follows: William Albert, Ida and Samuel Albert. William A. is now a resident of Kansas, living in Smoking Valley. Ida first married Alpheus Eddy, and after his death, Jonas Albert, by whom she had one child, Sherman Dalgreen, now living at Los Angeles, Cal., both of his parents being deceased, the death of the mother having occurred in 1884. Samuel Albert has been for twenty years lost to the family, no tidings of him having been received during that period.

In early youth, Samuel De Counter had an opportunity of attending school about three months only. He left home when he was a little more than twelve years of age, his father having married a second time. When quite a young man, he had some experience in riding race horses, and from that drifted into teaming. About the year 1850 he turned his attention to farming in the vicinity of his birthplace, and in 1860, bought eighty acres of land in Section 27, Woodstock Township, four acres of which had been cleared. A log cabin with a wide fireplace stood in the opening, and into this Mr. De Counter moved, and applied himself to the arduous task of clearing the ground of timber and brush, and making a comfortable home and productive farm. In this effort he achieved a signal success. Under careful and sagacious management, all his undertakings were attended by profitable results. To his original 80-acre purchase he made additions amounting to 958 acres, and the home farm now comprises 1038 acres, of which 668 acres are in Camden Township. His career has been one of the most prosperous ever known in Schuyler County. Beginning without the advantages of even ordinary schooling and destitute of financial resources, he gained his education through keen observation and by availing himself of every opportunity of self-instruction, and this, together with energy, perseverance, thrift and integrity, is the foundation of his present handsome competency. Naturally possessed of a strong mind and sound judgment, he became a leader in connection with the agricultural interests of the county, and for many years was conspicuous in all enterprises pertaining to its progress and development. In the period of his activity, he was always a man of genial disposition, of jovial bearing and kindly impulses, and never declined to relieve the needs of anyone approaching him in distress.

Mr. De Counter has been twice married, his first marriage taking place in 1850, when Catherine Miller became his wife. Three children were the issue of this union, namely: Frederick S., Maurice and Emma. Frederick first married a lady named Shull, and after her death, was wedded to a Miss Ronery, residing in Camden Township, Schuyler County, who is now deceased. He was the father of seven children by this marriage, as follows: one who died in infancy; Harriet, Anna, Dorothy and Brice, all deceased; Peter F. and Clarence of California. Frederick De Counter departed this life in 1895. Maurice De Counter married Minnie Houser, and by her had seven children, namely: Dotty and Mary, both of whom died at the age of twenty years; Nettie, who died in 1905; Samuel, deceased; Susan, Lella and Lon. Maurice De Counter died in January, 1901, and his widow is a resident of Camden Township. Emma, the third child of Samuel De Counter's first marriage, became the wife of Nelson Hiding, a farmer in Camden Township, and they had eight children, namely: Laura, Samuel, Katie and Daisy (deceased), Clifford, Logan, Raleigh, and Guy. Catherine (Miller) De Counter, first wife of the subject of this sketch, passed away in 1854, and Mr. De Counter subsequently wedded Harriet Stubbs, who died, much lamented, November 7, 1906. She was a faithful and devoted companion and a constant helpmeet of her husband for half a century, and much of his success is attributed to her invaluable assistance. Her union with Mr. De Counter resulted in one child, Catherine, who died at the age of nineteen years. The latter became the wife of George Luthey, and was the mother of one child, Clarence.

Politically, Samuel De Counter has been an adherent of the Democratic party throughout his mature life, but has never entertained any ambition for official distinction. On numerous occasions he has been solicited by appreciative friends to become a candidate for public office, but has steadfastly declined, preferring to devote his whole attention to his extensive personal interests, and to promoting the welfare of the community by his earnest endeavors as a private citizen. He is profoundly respected by all classes in the locality where his career has spanned a period of four-score years.

DEMAREE, William L.—Not the least valuable of the legacies left Schuyler County by citizens of an earlier generation are the sons who bear their names and painstakingly maintain their standards of enterprise by vigorous effort. Something of the iron of this courageous band has entered into the lives of their progeny, who, placed in different and less exacting circumstances, fulfill their destiny with equally commendable zeal and conscientiousness. Belonging to this class is William L. Demaree, who was born in Section 16, Rushville Township, June 7, 1858, and who now owns a splendid farm of 280 acres in Section 22 of the same township. Mr. Demaree is one of the absolutely dependable men of his section, a man in touch with agricultural science, chemistry and all needful farm knowledge, a politician who has proved himself above the petty temptations of the offices he has held, and a promotor of all that tends to make country life broad, enjoyable and useful.

Ludwell H. Demaree, father of William L., was born in Mercer County, Ky., being of French ancestry. He was reared on a farm, and in early life married Martha Yankee, a native of Washington County, with whom he came to Schuyler County in 1857. Locating on Section 16, Rushville Township, he eventually became the owner of 204 acres, the most of it under heavy timber, and considerable of which was cleared at the time of his death on October 10, 1872. The mother of our subject died September 4, 1888. He was a man of broad mind and liberal education, and in his native state and for a year after coming to Schuyler County, was engaged in school teaching with considerable success. He became one of the leading men of the community, filled various political offices, including that of Supervisor of Rushville Township, and was extremely active in church work, for practically all of his active life associating himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church South. For many years he was a church official, serving as delegate to District and General Conferences, and was generous in his contributions to local and foreign missions. Socially he was a Mason, and of all the men in the community he was one of the most genial, sympathetic and approachable. One daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ludwell H. Demaree died at three years of age. Of three sons and three daughters living, Melinda Bell is the wife of Leonidas Scott, of Rushville; Laura is the wife of Alexander Acheson, of Bainbridge Township; John H. is a resident of Woburn, Ill.; George L. is a conductor out of Danville, Ill., and Nora, wife of J. A. Harrison, is now living in Birmingham Township, and William L. is the subject of this sketch. Mrs. W. L. Demaree belonged to a family of three children, of whom her brother Robert is living at Bardolph, McDonough County.

William L. Demaree spent his youth on the home farm, and while performing many hard tasks, developed great stability and strength of character. That he had initiative and resourcefulness was demonstrated during his fourteenth year, when, owing to the death of his father, the management of the farm devolved largely upon him. He left the old place at the time of his marriage April 4, 1883, to Rebecca, daughter of John and Margaret (Acheson) Hamilton, who was born in Rushville Township December 27, 1855. Her father, Mr. Hamilton, died August 26, 1860, and Mrs. Hamilton on June 26, 1872. Settling on a farm of 140 acres in Section 9, Rushville Township, Mr. Demaree made many improvements thereon, adding sixty acres and having in all 200 tillable acres. Disposing of this farm in 1893, he bought 280 acres in Section 22, Rushville Township, which he has converted into one of the best farming properties in the neighborhood. In 1906 he erected one of the finest rural residences in the county, heated by hot water and with water facilities throughout.

It is furnished in modern fashion, has eleven large and airy rooms, and the best known plumbing and ventilation. The general appearance of the farm is in keeping with the home of the occupants, suggesting much thought for comfort, convenience and beautiful natural effects.

To Mr. and Mrs. Demaree have been born three children, namely: Dwight Edgar, born July 7, 1886, and died January 27, 1902; Paul, born May 30, 1890, and Morris H., born February 4, 1893.

Mr. Demaree is one of the most useful as well as many-sided men in his township. He believes in bringing outside influences to the farm, in keeping in touch with the happenings without his boundaries, and in cultivating pleasant and sociable relations with those among whom his lot is cast. He is an earnest and consistent advocate of temperance, a Prohibitionist in politics, and advocates at all times the simple, unostentatious life. Fraternally he is a Royal Arch Mason and Knight Templar. He is one of the most liberal and far-seeing men of his community, and his home is the center of a fine and unfailing hospitality.

DEWITT, Allen.—In the environments in which his activities are centered in Woodstock Township, Allen Dewitt is approved for his industry and good judgment, and respected for his uprightness and public spirit. Years of application under somewhat discouraging circumstances have made him the owner of a farm of 172½ acres in Sections 12 and 13, all under cultivation, and upon which he has erected a comfortable home, large barns and outhouses, and added such general improvements as were suggested by his conservative and cautious advancement. He first became a land-owner in 1899, purchasing ninety-two acres of his present farm, and the best improvement on the place at the time was a log cabin erected in 1820. Into this the family moved and there lived until 1896, when the primitive reminder of the days of the frontier gave place to the present modern rural home. Mr. Dewitt is engaged in general farming, raising also a high grade of cattle, hogs and horses. He has done much to insure the comfort and happiness of his family independent of financial returns, and the place is well supplied with beautiful shade trees, shrubs, gardens and an orchard bearing a variety of fruit.

Mr. Dewitt is a native of Woodstock Township, where he was born on Section 13, October 2, 1862. His parents, John and Rebecca (Skaggs) Dewitt, were natives of Ohio and Illinois, respectively, and his paternal grandfather, Henry Dewitt, was born in Kentucky. Both the Dewitt and Skaggs families came early to Illinois, and John Dewitt married in 1858, the same year settling in Section 13, Woodstock Township, where he lived until about 1874. He then bought a farm in Section 1, the same township, and two years later his quiet and unostentatious life came to an end, his legacy to those who survived him being well improved property, a good name and an example of honestly and fair dealing. His wife still makes her home on the old place, enjoying fair health after a long and industrious life, and after rocking the cradle of ten children, five sons and five daughters. Of these the following survive: Laura, wife of John C. Logsdon, of Cooperstown, Brown County, Ill.; Allen; John, of Woodstock Township; Lizzie, wife of Mr. John Dieterich, of Cooperstown and brother of Judge Dietrich, whose biography appears on another page of this work; Elmer and Almira, twins, the former on the home place and the latter the wife of F. M. Bowen, of Ellenburg, Wash.; Lucy, wife of Henry Rich, a farmer of Brown County; and Joseph, a farmer of Woodstock Township.

The marriage of Allen Dewitt and Cora G. Snyder occurred November 22, 1888, Miss Snyder being a daughter of Jacob and Margaret (Rush) Snyder, of Mount Sterling, Ill. Her parents were natives of Pennsylvania and Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Snyder were the parents of nine children, six of them living as follows: John B. resides at Cooperstown, Brown County, Ill.; Ida, wife of J. H. Chute of the same place; Mrs. Allen Dewitt; Charles H. of Cooperstown, Ill.; Oliver E., of Mt. Sterling, Ill.; Arthur L. of Ripley, Brown County, Ill. Those deceased were: Joseph F. of Cooperstown, Ill.; Luella B., wife of Shelton Hoffman, of Mt. Sterling, Ill.; Angie E., wife of Martin T. Howell, of Cooperstown, Ill.; Mrs. Snyder, the mother of this family, passed away December 15, 1892.

Mr. and Mrs. Dewitt are the parents of six children: an infant who died unnamed; Ruth, born August 9, 1891; Margaret, born July 8, 1893; Gladys, born October 2, 1896; Dena, born April 30, 1901; Aline, born May 17, 1903. Mr. Dewitt is popular socially, and is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Ripley, Ill. In politics he is affiliated with the Republican party.

DEWITT, Cyrus L.—Of the men whose half-century of experience has been centered in Schuyler County, none express in more forcible language the value of homely, sterling virtues than Cyrus L. DeWitt. The industry, honesty and public-spiritedness of this well-to-do retired citizen of Rushville, has been a source of unflinching pride to his fellow townsmen for many years, and his rise from small beginnings, and with comparatively meager early advantages, has been an inspiration to many of the youth of the present generation. Mr. DeWitt was born in the then very small village of Littleton, Schuyler County, December 20, 1857, and his early influences were such as to bring out the best traits of his character. Of his father, Rev. James DeWitt, an old time Methodist Episcopal clergyman, mention is made elsewhere in this work.

Mr. DeWitt received his preliminary training in the public school of Littleton, and, what was better, acquired a taste for learning which has increased steadily with the passing years. He remained on his father's farm until about twenty years of age, in 1887 locating on a rented farm near Littleton, where he engaged in general farming and stock-raising until his marriage, February 1, 1888, to Bertha McKee, daughter of William McKee, one of the successful and honored pioneers of Schuyler County. Mrs. DeWitt was born near Rushville, Ill., July 2, 1863, and was educated in the public schools. The young people began housekeeping on the old McKee homestead, in Section 18, Rushville Township, making that their home, and devoting its 320 acres to produce and stock-raising until Mr. DeWitt retired from farming and purchased his present beautiful and costly home in Rushville in the fall of 1906. Mr. and Mrs. DeWitt are the parents of one daughter, Helen, born Oct. 27, 1895. As a result of his unremitting industry and good judgment, he now is the owner of 160 acres in Littleton Township, 100 acres in Rushville Township, a part of which lies in the town of Rushville. William McKee died several years ago, and his wife, who now is in her eighty-third year, is living with Mr. and Mrs. DeWitt. Mrs. McKee retains her faculties practically unimpaired, and delights in recalling the pioneer days of which she was an important and industrious part.

In addition to his substantial success as a farmer, Mr. DeWitt has achieved notice in the community in a variety of ways, and at the present time is General Superintendent of the Grange Telephone Company, the most extensive telephone organization in Schuyler County. He was one of the organizers and a charter member of this organization, and its present excellent standing speaks well for the enterprise and practical interests of its present Superintendent. Although staunchly in favor of Republican principles and issues, he has steadfastly refused official honors, preferring the duties which have lain closer at hand, and which are less variable in their demands upon his time and strength. He is a keen appreciator of the advantages of fraternal associations, and has been a member of the Masons for many years. Education, ethics, good roads, charitable organizations and county interests in general, have received his earnest and practical support, and his advice regarding important issues in the community ever has been sound, far-sighted and worthy of confidence. Many good deeds and many disinterested kindnesses are attributed to him, and his name stands for the strong character and worth of the community.

DEWITT, Rev. James (deceased).—Arriving in Schuyler County in the latter 'thirties as an almost penniless pedestrian in search of a wider field of labor, Rev. James DeWitt remained the associate of the growing fortunes of this part of the State until his death, September 9, 1897, achieving success in the meantime as a farmer, merchant, Methodist Episcopal clergyman and politician. Mr. DeWitt was born in Hope, Warren County, N. J., November 5, 1817, a son of

Mrs B. F. Reberman

James and Anna (Coates) DeWitt, both natives of New Jersey, the former born in Sussex County. The family came to Oakland County, Mich., in 1842, and here the elder DeWitt died at the age of ninety-six years, his wife dying at the age of seventy years. They reared a family of eight children, of whom Rev. James was next to the youngest.

James DeWitt knew few advantages in his youth, and the responsibility of self-support settled upon his life when but thirteen years had passed over his head. He then began to clerk in the store of an older brother, and about 1830 went to Pennsylvania, and filled a similar position in the general store of another brother. In the spring of 1838 he came by canal, river and rail to St. Louis, Mo., thence by boat up the Mississippi and Illinois Rivers to Schuyler County, where he clerked for the rest of the summer for Dr. B. V. Teel. Thrifty and economical, he saved all possible of his meager earnings, expending the same on a trip back to New Jersey, where he spent the summer of 1839. Returning to Schuyler County in the fall of the same year, he secured a position with Wilson & Greer, which he held until 1842, when his marriage, on January 25th, to Ellen Little, became the determining factor which resulted in his remaining in Rushville as a clerk in the general store of his father-in-law, James Little. Mrs. DeWitt was born in Columbia, Lancaster County, Pa., and died in Schuyler County at the age of sixty-one years. She was the mother of seven children: James L., John M., George W., Euphemia E., who died at eleven years of age, Elizabeth, widow of John A. Young, living in Schuyler County; Cyrus L., mention of whom may be found elsewhere in this work; and William A. James and Rebecca Little, parents of Mrs. DeWitt, were born in Ireland, and came to the United States in 1801, their deaths occurring in Schuyler County at the age of seventy and eighty-four years respectively. October 3, 1883, Mr. DeWitt contracted marriage with Mrs. Catherine H. (Pittinger) Waddell.

Leaving the employ of his father-in-law in 1844, Mr. DeWitt engaged in business for himself with Mr. Greer, eventually having other business partners, but in 1850 disposed of his business and with his brother-in-law, Dr. W. H. Window, engaged in conducting a general store in Littleton Township, with which he was connected for about ten years. In 1862 he located on a farm and intelligently developed its resources up to the time of his death. In the meantime, the commercial side of life had by no means overshadowed the large moral usefulness which inspired his activity for more than half a century. With but limited scholastic advantages, he yet secured an excellent education, and he made study one of the great objects of his life. Having determined upon the ministerial life he completed a theological course in one year, and thereafter exerted a wide influence in the Methodist Episcopal Church as a local preacher. He had earnestness and enthusiasm, and comparative religious breadth and tolerance, and his half century in the ministry was prolific of good to uncounted thousands. Politically also he was prominent and influential, serving as County Treasurer, Postmaster, Deputy Marshal, Census Enumerator for one half of the county, as Representative in the State Legislature one term (1875-76), and Supervisor for ten terms.

DIETERICH, Judge William H.—The present Judge of Schuyler County and former City Attorney of Rushville and Master in Chancery of Schuyler County, not only is a strong and forceful exponent of legal science, but is a politician of more than average influence and ability, a popular member of various social organizations, and a public-spirited promotor of enterprises that tend to the permanent well-being of the community. In addition, he belongs to the predominating class of self-made men, and from earliest youth has shown a resourcefulness in keeping with his well defined and purposeful ambitions.

A native of Cooperstown, Brown County, Ill., Mr. Dietrich was born March 31, 1876, a son of George H. and Anna K. (Berg) Dieterich, both of whom were born in Germany. Mr. Dieterich's home training included a knowledge of the German language, which has been of great help to him in many emergencies of his career. His people were early settlers and farmers of Brown County, where he attended the public schools and evidenced tastes and abilities which must needs seek other environment for their proper development. At the age of seventeen years in 1893, he came to Rushville and entered the Normal School, returning to Cooperstown the following spring. In 1895 he was appointed an official of the Illinois Central Hospital at Jacksonville, Ill., a position which he resigned in September, 1896, that he might return to the Normal School, from which he was graduated with honor in the class of 1897. For the following four terms he served as one of the faculty of his home school at LaGrange, Ill., where he achieved merited popularity both as a teacher and associate of his pupils.

In the meantime Mr. Dieterich had planned to devote his energies to the profession of law, and in 1898 became a student in the law office of Glass & Bottenberg, the following year entering the law department of the Northern Indiana University at Valparaiso. After his admission to the bar of Illinois, on June 5, 1901, he settled permanently in Rushville, where he has since been engaged in a general practice of law, and has advanced to a degree of success rarely realized by anyone in so short a time. His election as City Attorney of Rushville occurred in 1903, and the same year was appointed Master in Chancery for Schuyler County, which office he held for two terms. His allegiance to the Democratic party dates from his first voting days, and has been characterized by its strenuous support as a campaigner, official and delegate. In the former capacity he is aided by special gifts as an orator, including clear and logical thinking, and perfect command of the subject upon which he intends to speak. He was a delegate to the senatorial convention at Plymouth in 1900, and a committeeman of the senatorial district, which latter position he still holds, as well as that of Chairman of the Democratic Central Committee of Schuyler County. He was a delegate to the State Convention in 1902, and to the Judicial Convention at Pittsfield in 1903, and was chairman of the special Judicial Convention which met at Jacksonville in 1906 to fill vacancy caused by the death of Hon. Thomas Meehan. He also has served as Alderman of the Third ward, and as Treasurer of the Rushville Union schools for three terms. In November, 1906, he was elected County Judge of Schuyler County, a position which he still holds.

The family of Mr. Dieterich consists of his wife, Nona J. (Runkle) Dieterich, who was born in Littleton, Schuyler County, and educated in the public schools of Rushville. They have one child, Ruth, another daughter, Helen, having died May 22, 1907, at the age of five years and seven months. Fraternally Mr. Dieterich is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias and Modern Woodmen of America. He is one of the most erudite and capable members of the bar of Schuyler County, which fact, taken in connection with his predilection for public affairs, would seem to assure him a future of great promise and usefulness.

DIXON, Robert Bruce.—No farmer of Schuyler County has achieved greater success in agricultural pursuits than has Bruce Dixon, whose beautiful homestead lies on Section 2 of Hickory Township and whose landed possessions comprise 852 acres. Through his unaided exertions he has risen to prominence as a farmer. Nothing aided him in his struggle except the fact that he was born of fine pioneer parentage and inherited the splendid traits which characterized the men who developed our western lands. His early home was in a log cabin destitute of nearly every comfort. Now his home is one of the most comfortable and convenient to be found in the entire county. Hot and cold water are to be found in every room, while gasoline furnishes light for the residence. By the aid of a gasoline engine, water is forced from a spring to a tank on a high hill back of the house. From the tank the water is forced into the house, the barn and the feedlots, sufficient being furnished the latter to water 300 head of stock. The stock-barn, 82x65 feet in dimensions, is one of the most complete in this region, in fact in all the western part of the State. Every facility has been provided for the prompt and easy care of from one to two hundred head of stock, and only the best cattle and hogs are bred on the place.

The Dixon family was founded in America by John Dixon in 1832, he being accompanied by his family, which included a son, James, born in county Tyrone, Ireland, in 1816. After landing in New York, the family traveled overland to Ohio and settled in Coshocton County, that State, where the parents died about 1841. One of the children, Jane, remained in Ohio, dying there in 1843. Three sons, James, Robert and Stewart, came to Illinois, where James secured employment on the canal. Later he went to Iowa and worked as a farm hand for nine dollars per month. At the end of three years he had drawn only four dollars of his wages, and with the balance of the money he bought a tract of wild land in Iowa. From there he came to Schuyler County, Ill., where he bought eighty acres now known as the Fisher farm. This he sold for $8,000, which, with $1,000 additional, he invested in 292 acres of land where his son now resides. At the time of his death, on September 18, 1906, he owned 132 acres of as fertile land as could be found in the county.

In February, 1852, James Dixon married Miss Rhoda Welkes, who was born in Ohio, and accompanied her parents to Illinois, settling in Canton Township, Fulton County. Of her marriage four children were born, namely: Robert Bruce, who is better known by the name of Bruce; Margaret, who married William Price, a farmer in Hickory Township; John of Peoria; and Frank, who is in Colorado Springs, Colo., for the benefit of his health. The recollections of James Dixon extended back to the days when the city of Chicago was only a duck pond; he remembered also one of the first steam railroads in America, that being the one built from New York City to Hudson, N. Y. In youth he worked on the old canal at Columbus, Ohio, where the work was done with the aid of shovels and wheelbarrows. In politics he was a staunch Democrat. In early days he underwent many privations and hardships, but his genial Irish wit always saved the day and brought him friends in every circle of society.

Born in Woodland Township, Fulton County, Ill., November 5, 1853, Bruce Dixon remained at home until he was twenty-one years of age. In 1874 he married Mary Parker, who died in 1883, leaving two children, namely: Sadie, who is the wife of Lee Bollinger, a farmer near Sheldon's Grove, Schuyler County; and Roy, who married Miss Sackman and lives on a farm in Schuyler County. The daughter has a son, Ernest, while Roy has two sons, Russell and Kenneth. The second wife of Bruce Dixon was Lizzie Lauderbach, who died about 1893. There were three children of this union: Grove, Earl and Lizzie, the last-named having died in infancy. The present wife of Bruce Dixon was Miss Etta Taylor, born July 29, 1870, in Springfield, Ill., where her father, James Taylor, also was born and reared. The death of Mr. Taylor occurred in 1906. Mr. and Mrs. Dixon lost one child who died in infancy, and have surviving one son, Clifford, born April 29, 1897. For fifty-four years Mr. Dixon has made his home in Schuyler County and has been identified with the people of Hickory Township, where he bought his first piece of land, the same comprising 160 acres on Section 11. From that first purchase he has built up his present possessions, becoming one of the largest land-owners of the township. Despite the labor connected with the management of his property he has leisure for participation in neighborhood affairs, keeps posted concerning national problems and furthermore frequently enjoys a hunt in the woods, where his skilled marksmanship is brought into evidence through the game that falls beneath his unerring aim.

DODDS, Oren E., a farmer of enterprising and progressive tendencies, and a young man of excellent traits of character, was born in Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County, Ill., his present home, March 3, 1877. His parents were Thomas and Emily (Ward) Dodds, natives of Schuyler County, whose family history will be found in a separate biographical narrative in this immediate connection. Mr. Dodds grew to manhood on the homestead farm, his youth being passed in assisting in the routine of labor upon the place, and attending the district schools of the vicinity. After remaining with his parents until he was twenty-five years of age, he began farming on his own responsibility, cultivating a farm belonging to his father. In 1904, Mr. Dodds bought 124 acres of land known as the "McCormick farm," and situated in Sections 12 and 13, Bainbridge Township, to which he moved in the fall of that year. The place was in a neglected condition, and he proceeded to put up fences, build barns, and materially improve the dwelling, until he transformed the property into a comfortable and attractive home. Besides general farming he devotes considerable attention to stock raising, and breeds a good grade of horses, cattle and hogs.

On March 26, 1902, Mr. Dodds was joined in matrimonial bonds with Margaret L. Bellamy, who was born January 20, 1884, and is a daughter of D. M. and Lucinda (Greer) Bellamy, both natives of Schuyler County. Her father, who was a well known farmer, died January 30, 1904, and her mother is still living on the old homestead farm in Bainbridge Township. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Dodds two children have been born, namely: George Madison, born April 12, 1903; and Lucy E., born March 24, 1907.

Politically, Mr. Dodds is an adherent of the Democratic party, and held the office of Tax Collector from 1900 to 1902, discharging its duties with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of his constituents. Fraternally, he is identified with the M. W. A., Pleasantview Camp, No. 2040. Mrs. Dodds is a communicant of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to which her husband is a liberal contributor. He is also a generous supporter of the cause of education, and of all benevolent enterprises, and both he and his wife are highly esteemed throughout the community.

DODDS, Thomas.—For half a century the Dodds family have taken an active and leading part in the agricultural development and the civic progress of Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County, and their participation has never been clouded by anything suggestive of weak or dishonorable conduct. Thomas Dodds, the representative so well known in this section of the State, was born in Canfield, Mahoning County, Ohio, October 25, 1852, a son of Samuel and Margaret J. (Wilson) Dodds. His parents were both born in County Down, Ireland, the mother coming to America when but a child and the father when a young man, their families settling in Canfield, where their marriage occurred. Samuel Dodds was born June 18, 1818, and came to America in 1845, first locating in Philadelphia, where he plied his trade as a shoemaker. Later he removed to Mahoning County, Ohio, where he married Miss Wilson June 16, 1848, and in 1858 came with his family to Schuyler County, settling on a farm in Section 23, Bainbridge Township. They first arrived at Frederick and walked to an uncle's place in Bainbridge Township, where they remained until the father could complete a log cabin on his land. He worked at his trade until he could clear the farm and derive his living from its products, after which he continued his improvements on the land and added a 40-acre tract to his original purchase. Finally he had the satisfaction of establishing one of the finest homesteads of 120 acres in Bainbridge Township, and here his widow still resides with her son Samuel. The husband and father passed away October 25, 1904, at the age of eighty-six years.

The deceased was a strong man intellectually and morally. In politics he was a Democrat, and quite prominent in the public affairs of the county, serving as Justice of the Peace for many years, and also as Supervisor of the township. While not a member of any church, he liberally contributed to the support of several Protestant societies, and was always prompt to uphold worthy movements of a charitable and moral nature. Any public enterprise which promised well for Bainbridge Township could rely upon the assistance of Samuel Dodds to the full extent of his means. While a man of strong and decided character, he was free in commending the work of others, and there was no one to whom he gave so much credit for his own success and happiness in the world as to his faithful and life-long partner, his honored wife and now his widow.

The following named children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Dodds: William J. Dodds, born December 25, 1849, and who is a farmer living near the old homestead; Thomas; Samuel, born September 25, 1854, and living with his mother on the home farm in Section 23, Bainbridge Township; Martha, now the wife of Jackson Ward, whose farm is in Section 12, Bainbridge Township; Mary E., who married Henry Drave, her husband's place being on the south-west quarter of Section 11, same township; Sarah J., wife of Thomas Herron, who reside on a farm in Section 13, and Elizabeth, who died in infancy.

Thomas Dodds, the second child of the family, came with his parents from Ohio to Schuyler County when he was about six years of age. In the district school of Bainbridge Township he therefore obtained most of his education, remaining on the old home farm until his marriage in 1874, at the age of twenty-one years. He then rented a farm of Thomas Herron, making his home with that gentleman's family for some time. He afterward moved to the farm, which he had also rented and which he successfully operated until 1879, when he purchased sixty acres in Section 11, Bainbridge Township, then only partially improved, but which he has since transformed into one of the handsomest and most productive farms in this part of the county. He has made several additions to his original purchase, so that his homestead now consists of 186 acres. He has a beautiful home and surrounded by his family and numerous friends, is in a position to enjoy life and benefit the lives of others. His public services to the community have been noticeable, as he has held with honor several township offices, including those of Assessor and Supervisor. In politics he is a Democrat, while his ancestry and his warm sympathies make him a member of the Mutual Protective League. Both he and his family are members of the Southern Methodist Church. Although well known and highly esteemed as a public man and as a large breeder and shipper of live-stock, Mr. Dodds probably takes the most substantial and the deepest pride in the fact that he has given each of his children a good education and fitted them to be useful members of society, and from whatever point his life is viewed, it is found to be guided by a strong mind and regulated by a Christian conscience. Mr. Dodds is also a man of strong physical constitution, as is illustrated by a serious accident which befell him twelve ago. On February 13, 1895, he was sawing a large tree, and, after cutting it through, started to run in the opposite direction from which he expected it to fall. Through some miscalculation, it fell toward and upon him, crushing him to the earth. At first it was thought that he had been killed, but although his injuries were very severe, he has now almost recovered, and his friends prophesy many more years of usefulness and honor for him.

On February 25, 1874, Mr. Dodds was wedded to Miss Nancy A. Ward, who has borne him eleven children, namely: Julia, now the wife of William Malcomson, a farmer of Rushville Township, Schuyler County; Oren, a farmer of Bainbridge Township, who married Margaret Bellamy; Alma, wife of Bert Gabbert, a resident of Beardstown, Ill.; Curtis, living on the old home farm; Herbert, who died in infancy; Mabel, who, with filial affection and rare judgment, is devoting her life to the care of the household and the motherless children; Lawrence, a graduate of the commercial department of the Rushville Normal College, class of 1907;

Margarette and Veretta Jane (twins), the latter of whom died in infancy; David and Daisy, also twins, the latter dying young.

The faithful mother of this family died on the 15th of June, 1896. She was a devout Christian, and one of the first converts to join the Mount Carmel Church at the meeting held in the Ward school house by the Rev. Mr. Johnson. Mrs. Dodd's character was tender, lovable and helpful. She was always anxious to assist any one in trouble and never waited for an invitation before doing acts of kindness. In the home especially, the beauties of her being blossomed in their fulness; it was always the abode of the Christian woman, where forgiveness and loving kindness overrode the rigors of stern justice; and it was here that the full measure of the loss caused by her death is more thoroughly appreciated.

DODDS, Watson, a very creditable type of the younger element among the farming population of Schuyler County, Ill., was born in Bainbridge Township, where his home is still located, on August 31, 1871. He is a son of William J. and Josephine (Hatfield) Dodds, natives of Ohio and Illinois, respectively. The paternal grandparents, Samuel and Margaret Dodds, were originally from Ireland and the grandparents on the maternal side, Charles and Mary (Lamaster) Hatfield, born in Kentucky, were among the pioneer settlers of Schuyler County, their advent in this region dating back to 1824. The career of Samuel Dodds and that of William J. Dodds are portrayed in separate narratives, published in this series of personal records.

Watson Dodds was reared upon the paternal farm, receiving his education in the district schools of the neighborhood. After assisting in work upon the home place until he was about twenty years of age, he commenced farming for himself on property owned by his father-in-law, on Section 15, Bainbridge Township, where he remained seven years. In 1898 he purchased 140 acres in Section 15 of the same township, which he improved and developed it into a very desirable farm. This place he disposed of in 1906, buying eighty acres in Section 14, Bainbridge Township, the purchase price being $110 per acre. It is one of the choicest 80-acre tracts in the entire township, and was bought for use as a permanent home. Mr. Dodds raises a fine grade of horses and cattle, and a pure breed of Poland-China hogs. Formerly, he belonged to the Patrons of Husbandry, and for a considerable period, was Master of the Grange. A thoroughly practical farmer, with strong common sense, and sound judgment, he combines all the qualities of a successful agriculturist. He is the bearer of one of the leading names in his locality, the Dodds family having been long and conspicuously identified with the growth and prosperity of this portion of Schuyler County.

On July 9, 1892, Mr. Dodds was united in marriage with Eva A. Strong, who was born in Illinois on December 15, 1872, a daughter of Thomas Q. and Augusta Strong, natives of Illinois and New York respectively. Two children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Dodds, namely: Iva B., born March 1, 1893, and Forrest L., born June 4, 1895.

In politics, Mr. Dodds is an earnest supporter of the Democratic party, and one of the most active political workers of the township. For two years, he held the office of Collector and served as School Treasurer eight years. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and both are held in high esteem by many friends.

DODDS, William J., a farmer of sterling character and recognized merit, who has been a resident of Schuyler County, Ill., for fifty years, and pursues his wonted occupation in Section 23, Bainbridge Township, was born in Mahoning County, Ohio, December 25, 1849, a son of Samuel and Margarette (Wilson) Dodds, natives of Ireland. Details in regard to his father's career, and further particulars relating to the family history, may be found in the biographical sketch of Thomas Dodds appearing elsewhere in this connection. William Dodds was brought to Illinois by his parents when he was nine years old, and here received his education in the district schools and assisted in the work of the home farm until the time of his marriage. After that event he followed farming on rented land for a number of years. In 1876, he bought a farm in Section 23, Bainbridge Township, which has been his home ever since. He owns forty-two acres, operates, in all, 122 acres, and is considered a thorough and systematic farmer.

On August 14, 1870, Mr. Dodds was united in marriage with Josephine Hatfield, who was born in Schuyler County, August 11, 1849, a daughter of Charles and Mary (Lamester) Hatfield, natives of Kentucky, who were among the earliest settlers of Schuyler County, arriving about the year 1824. When they located in Bainbridge Township, Indians were much more numerous than white people in this region, and even after the marriage of Mrs. Dodds, traces of the wandering tribes were visible in every direction. Charles Hatfield died at the home of his son, Hugh Hatfield, in Bainbridge Township, at the age of eighty-six years, while his widow died at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Dodds, when eight-seven years old. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Dodds, as follows: Watson, Charles, Frank, Grover, and Grace A. A biographical record of Watson Dodds appears elsewhere in this connection. Charles Dodds, who married Bertha Newell, is a stock-feeder in the vicinity of Jacksonville, Ill.; Frank is at home; Grover, who married Lily Herron, is engaged in farming in Bainbridge Township, and is the father of three children, Zilpha, Beulah and Sarah; and Grace is with her parents.

In politics, Mr. Dodds is a supporter of the Democratic party, and has rendered creditable service in various township offices. He has lived in Schuyler County since 1858, and has faithfully discharged the duties of a useful citizen, doing his share to promote the development of the locality, and always being identified with the best interests of the community of which he is a respected member.

DODGE, J. Reuben, a very worthy and creditable type of the younger element of the agricultural class in Schuyler County, Ill., who is liked and respected by his neighbors in Littleton Township, and enjoys the confidence and good will of all who have dealings with him as a farmer and stock-raiser, was born in the same Township, September 30, 1877. Mr. Dodge is a son of John S. and Rachael (Moore) Dodge, of McLean County, Ill., and his grandparents on the paternal side were Solomon and Elizabeth (Springer) Dodge. Of the children of John S. Dodge and wife, three sons and three daughters are still living, the subject of this personal record being the fifth in order of birth. Both parents are well known and highly esteemed citizens of Littleton, where they now reside.

In early youth, Reuben Dodge received his education in the common schools of Littleton Township, remaining at home until he reached the age of twenty-one years. Shortly after attaining his majority, together with his brother Truman, he rented a farm of 230 acres, on which he lived five years. Subsequently, he located on the home farm in Section 16, Littleton Township, his father having withdrawn from active business in March, 1907. The farm consists of 160 acres, well improved and in good condition. Besides general farming, Mr. Dodge devotes considerable attention to raising horses, cattle and hogs, and profitable results attend his efforts.

On October 30, 1906, Mr. Dodge was united in marriage with Florence Esther Sweeney, who was born in Camden Township, Schuyler County, Ill., May 29, 1885. Mrs. Dodge is a daughter of John and Lucretia (Lake) Sweeney, and her father is a prominent and successful farmer of Camden Township. She received her education partly in Kennedy's Normal School at Rushville, Ill., also pursuing a course of study in Michigan, in the High School at Flint. For some time, she was a teacher in the district schools in Schuyler County.

Politically, Mr. Dodge is a supporter of the Republican party, and takes a good citizen's interest in public affairs. He and his amiable wife are regarded as among the most estimable people of the locality.

DOYLE, Simon (deceased), than whom no farmer of the early days in Schuyler County, Ill., was more worthy or more deeply respected, a citizen of eminent usefulness and a man of blameless life, was born in Maysville, Ky., September 30, 1821. He was a son of Edward and Jane (Dickson) Doyle, natives of Kentucky, where his father was born in 1798. At an early day Edward Doyle came from Kentucky to Vermillion County, Ill., during the 'thirties and thence removed to Rushville, Schuyler County,

In early life Simon Doyle followed the cooper's trade, continuing in this occupation until 1849, except during the period in which he was engaged in the Mexican War. On May 26, 1847, he enlisted in an independent cavalry company, of which he became Second Lieutenant under Capt. Adam S. Dunlap, and saw service in the field under Brig. Gen. John E. Wool, the company being mustered out November 7, 1848. His widow, who still survives, is one of the few pensioners for service rendered by some member of their family in that war.

On September 2, 1849, Mr. Doyle, with a large party from Schuyler County, left Rushville for the gold fields of California, and there was engaged in quest of precious metal from 1849 until 1852, being among the fortunate ones whose labors were rewarded with success. Returning to Illinois in 1852, he made but a brief sojourn in Rushville, when buying a lot of cattle and horses he started to drive them through to the Pacific Coast. When he reached the Indian country the drove was stampeded, and 12 head of cattle were lost. Finally arriving at his destination, he made a profitable sale of the remainder of his stock, but in the meantime had bought a ranch, which he was obliged to sell at a loss. In the fall of 1856, he bought out the interests of the other heirs of his father's estate. This consisted of 160 acres lying in Section 1, Buena Vista Township, where he made his home until the time of his death, January 14, 1885. He was a man of great force of character, and while firm in his opinions, was tolerant in regard to the views of others, recognizing fully in all, the innate right to entertain views contrary to his own. He was animated by the most kindly impulses, generous to the needy, and hospitable to all. No one in destitution or straitened circumstances was ever turned from his door empty-handed. In all his relations, public and private, he illustrated the virtues proverbially characteristic of the genial, chivalrous, sincere and honorable Kentucky gentleman.

On August 5, 1856, Mr. Doyle was united in marriage with Mildred Bagby, who was born in Glasgow, Ky., a daughter of Sylvanus M. and Frances (Courts) Bagby, natives of Virginia. Three children blessed this union, namely: Charles M., Edward M. and John B. The eldest son, Charles M., was born July 30, 1857, on the homestead farm, where he now resides, and which has always been his home. He received his education in the district schools, the Rushville public school, and Eureka College. Edward M., born September 27, 1849, married Carrie M. Lambert, and lives in Rushville. Before his marriage he and his brother had joint charge of the home farm. John B. was born June 12, 1862, and died in Joplin, Mo., September 24, 1899. He enlisted in the Utah Regiment of Volunteer Light Artillery during the Spanish-American War and served as Corporal, being mustered into service July 14, 1898. Charles M. Doyle, the eldest son, has always made a specialty of raising Shropshire sheep, and now has more than 100 head of fine, registered stock. He is a prominent and influential citizen, a Democrat in politics, and has twice represented his township on the Board of Supervisors. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the M. W. A. His aged mother, a woman of the most estimable traits of character, and the object of profound respect on the part of all who know her, still lives with him on the homestead and is on the honored roll of pensioners of the Mexican War. She is a devout member of the Christian Church, as was her lamented husband.

Simon Doyle was a staunch Democrat in politics, and exercised a strong influence in local party councils. He filled various county offices with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of his constituents, having successively served as Treasurer, County Clerk and Sheriff of Schuyler County. In fraternal circles, he was identified with the I. O. O. F., of which he was a charter member. The loss of such a man was sorely felt throughout the entire community, and his memory is warmly cherished by those who still revert to his broad philanthropy, and his fidelity to the best interests of the locality where the greater portion of his exemplary life was spent.

DYSON, Edwin, editor and publisher of The Rushville Times, is one of the old guard of Illinois editors, and for more than fifty years has been engaged in newspaper work, and for forty years editor of The Times. Mr. Dyson was born in Shaw, Lancashire, England, July 28, 1838, and was the youngest child of James and Hanna Dyson, who emigrated to America in 1841.

James Dyson, father of the subject of this sketch, was born June 12, 1809, and was married to Hannah Wilson in England, and they came to America with their family of four sons, in company with two brothers and two sisters of Mrs. Dyson. They took passage in a sailing vessel and were thirteen weeks on the water, landing at New Orleans. Here they met with persons who directed them to Rushville as one of the most promising towns in the new country, and they came up the Mississippi and Illinois Rivers on a steamboat, and landed at Erie, Schuyler County, continuing their journey overland to Rushville.

Life on the frontier was a new experience to them as in the old country. Mr. Dyson had been employed in the textile mills, and soon after arriving in Rushville he started on a prospecting tour to make a new location, and visited the Galena country, which was then attracting large numbers of settlers. But on his return he was taken ill and died August 4, 1841. His widow was thus left in a new country with four young children to care for, but she was one of those self-reliant, sturdy women who soon adapted herself to the customs and manners of her adopted country. She was afterwards married to Mr. Hampton, and died in Rushville January 6, 1893.

It was in the spring of 1854, that Edwin Dyson began his newspaper career, and he was then apprenticed to Daniel E. H. Johnson, editor of "The Schuyler Democrat," and as office "devil" assisted in getting out the first issue of that paper on April 20, 1854. Two years later, when the paper was sold to George Washington Scripps, he remained an employe of the office and eight years later removed to St. Louis to take a position on "The St. Louis Republican" (now the Republic).

While a resident of St. Louis he was sought by local Democrats to return and take charge of The Times, then owned by a stock company, and in the summer of 1868 he purchased the paper at Sheriff's sale and since July 2, 1868, has been editor and proprietor and has placed The Times in the front rank of country newspapers.

While always upholding the principles of Democracy, Mr. Dyson has not figured conspicuously as a politician, and his term of political office-holding has been limited to two terms as County Treasurer.

On April 2, 1860, Mr. Dyson was united in marriage to Mary Frances Irvin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Henderson Irvin, who emigrated from Kentucky in 1845. Mr. Irvin's parents, Starling and Elizabeth (Leysber) Irvin, had located in Littleton Township as early as 1839, coming from Garrard County, Kentucky. They were of Scotch descent and removed to Kentucky from Nova Scotia.

Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Dyson, and they are all living. Jennie L. was married to Dwight E. Ray, who died February 27, 1888; Orion E. was married to Miss Jessie McCorkle, and now resides in Chicago; Howard F. is associated with his father in editing "The Times."

DYSON, George.—Upon the sound judgment, sagacity, integrity and faithful devotion to duty of the directing heads of the numerous private banking institutions which accommodate the financial needs of the rural population, depends, in a large degree, the general prosperity of the sections where these institutions are located. In this respect the city of Rushville, Schuyler County, Ill., and the agricultural district surrounding it, are signally favored in the management of the affairs of the Bank of Schuyler County by one so eminently qualified for that purpose as the well-known gentleman whose name furnishes the caption of this personal narrative. Mr. Dyson was born in Rushville, Ill., March 2, 1867. He is a son of Joseph and Martha (Wheelhouse) Dyson, his father having been born in England, in 1831, and his mother in the State of Ohio, in 1844. His paternal great-grandfather was of English nativity, as was also Samuel Dyson, his grandfather. On the maternal side, his grandparents were George and Mary (Brown) Wheelhouse, the former born in Lancashire, England, and the latter in Ohio, his great-grandparents being natives of England. Joseph Dyson was the proprietor of a harness business. During the 'thirties, when a mere boy, he came from England to the United States, proceeding to Illinois and traveling up the Illinois River to the town of Erie, which was then located below the town of Frederick, but all trace of which is now obliterated. Joseph Dyson settled in Rushville, and became very prominent in connection with local affairs. He was long and conspicuously identified with the development and progress of the place, and served three terms in the capacity of Sheriff of Schuyler County. He died in 1898.

George Dyson received his education in the Rushville Union Schools, and after completing his studies applied himself to teaching. For five years, he taught in the schools of Frederick, Huntsville and Browning, Ill., occupying the position of Principal in each. During the last administration of President Cleveland Mr. Dyson was appointed Postmaster of the city of Rushville, and since the expiration of his term in that office, he has served as Vice-President of the Bank of Schuyler County, to the affairs of which he has diligently devoted his attention as active manager. That he discharges the responsibilities of this important position with marked ability and fidelity, is the consensus of opinion throughout the commercial and financial circles of that portion of the State, and he enjoys the confidence and respect of the business and agricultural elements of Schuyler County to an unusual extent. Although absorbingly occupied with the duties pertaining to the management of the bank, he finds time to take an earnest interest in the general welfare of his city. In politics, he is a steadfast supporter of the principles of the Democratic Party.

On March 26, 1908, Mr. Dyson was united in marriage to Miss Marie Bassett, of Paris, Mo. Mrs. Dyson is of one of the oldest and most prominent families of Missouri and is a cultured and charming lady.

DYSON, Howard F., was born in Rushville, Ill., December 17, 1870, and has ever since been a resident of that city. He was graduated from the Rushville High School in 1890, and afterwards spent two years at Rose Polytechnic Institute, Terre Haute, Ind. On returning home he entered upon newspaper work, and has ever since been connected with The Rushville Times.

While engaged in his newspaper work, Mr. Dyson has devoted some of his leisure time to local historical research, and his "Local Reminiscences of Lincoln" was published in the Proceedings of the State Historical Society, of which he is a member. His most important service in this line has been rendered as author and editor of the "History of Schuyler County," of which this biographic chapter constitutes a supplemental part.

A graduate of the Rushville High School, Mr. Dyson has ever taken an interest in educational matters, and in 1907, he was elected a member of the Board of Education of the Rushville Union School District.

In politics Mr. Dyson has always allied himself with the Democratic party and has served on the County Central Committee of his party as Chairman or Secretary since 1896, save in the campaign of 1904.

On December 13, 1907, Mr. Dyson was appointed County Surveyor of Schuyler County to fill a vacancy, and in 1908 has been renominated without opposition for the same office.

On March 27, 1898, Mr. Dyson was united in marriage to Alice Mary Deacon, of Eastbourne, England, the wedding taking place at the home of the bride's brother in St. Louis, Mo. They have three children: Edwin Arthur, Dorothy May and Marjory Grace Deacon Dyson.

EALLES, George H.—The Eales family is of old Southern stock, George H. being a native of Ralls County, Mo., born March 19, 1858, a son of James T. and Adelaide (Lowe) Eales. Both the father and the paternal grandfather were born in Kentucky, the former, with other members of the family, migrating to Ralls County when he was about six years of age. This transfer of the family home from Kentucky to Missouri was made in 1840, and in the latter State James T. Eales was married to Adelaide Lowe, who came of a Virginia stock; in Missouri also occurred the death of the father and the grandfather, who for many years previous has followed their agricultural occupations.

The children of James T. Eales were all born in Missouri, being the issue of two marriages. His first wife was Adelaide Lowe, as stated, and by this union were six sons and one daughter, of whom George H. was the first born. Albert is living and Charles died at the age of seven years. Mary J., now the wife of Isaac E. Groff, and Alfred, are both residents of Hannibal, Mo., while Justus T. is a farmer of Ralls County, that State, and Benjamin T. is a farmer of Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County. Wilbur W. Eales, the youngest of the family, is a resident of Watertown, S. Dak., and holds the position of General Agent of the International Harvester Company. The mother of this family died in Ralls County, Mo., in 1878.

Mr. Eales' second wife, whose maiden name was Molly Ann Brambles, became the mother of four children: Nellie, now the wife of Otis Helms, who are residents of New London, Mo.; Otis, who died at the age of fourteen years; Harry, who died when seven years of age; and Otto, who lives in Norfolk, Va., but is now connected with the United States Navy, serving on the battleship "Ohio." The mother is making her home with her daughter, Mrs. Helms.

George H. Eales was reared on his father's farm in Ralls County, Mo., was educated in the district schools and remained on the home place until he was twenty-one years of age, when he commenced to work in the neighborhood for monthly wages, continuing thus employed for about a year. In 1879 he removed to Schuyler County, again securing work as a farm laborer, and on February 4th of that year marrying Miss Sarah Eales, daughter of James Eales, who was his father's cousin. Mrs. Eales was born on the farm now owned by her husband, in February, 1857, and was one of seven children, both her parents being honored pioneers of the county. The other members of her family are: Luciana, widow of M. E. Garrison, who is now a resident of Rushville Ill.; Mary Jane, deceased; Madison Kelly, who lives in Indiana; Ann, widow of Horatio Stover, Schuyler County; Josephine, wife of James Madison Arman, and John, a resident of Rushville, living in retirement.

After the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. George H. Eales the former remained on the old home farm for six years, and in 1885 occupied the first place in Bainbridge Township, retaining it for four years. In 1889 Mr. Eales rented a farm in Bethel Township, McDonough County, which he operated for three years, and in 1892 returned to Schuyler County to purchase the old homestead of 200 acres in Section 5, Bainbridge Township. He has since added many fine improvements to the place, increasing its value and beauty.

Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Eales: Stella M., November 22, 1881, who is now the wife of Harley Wilson, a carpenter of Augusta, Ill., and mother of Glenn, Silva and Sibyl (the last two twins); Edna E., born July 4, 1883, who lives at home, and Mary A., who died in infancy. They also have an adopted son, Harry B. Eates. The parents are both members of the Christian Church. Mr. Eales being identified with the Modern Woodmen of America.

EALLES, Thomas.—Among the successful representatives of the agricultural element in Schuyler County, Ill., none is more worthy of commendatory mention than Thomas Eales, of Bainbridge Township. Mr. Eales was born in Ralls County, Mo., February 15, 1868, a son of James T. Eales and wife. Thomas Eales was reared on the paternal farm in Missouri, and received his education in the district schools of Ralls County, meanwhile assisting his father in work on the home place until he was about twenty years of age, when he purchased a half-interest in his father's land and live-stock, with whom he jointly conducted farming operations until 1894. They then divided their interests, and in the spring of that year, Thomas Eales came to Schuyler County, Ill., renting a farm which he purchased two years later, and on which he has since continued to live. It is located in Section 5, Bainbridge Township, consisting of 160 acres, of which 135 acres are under cultivation. Here he has made many important improvements, and now has one of the best agricultural properties in the township. He is very partial to draft horses, of the breeding of which he makes a specialty, and has on hand some of the best grades in Schuyler County.

In 1888, Mr. Eales was united in marriage with Miss Effie Grist, who was born in Bainbridge Township, a daughter of Simon J. Grist and wife, her father being one of the first male children born in Rushville. This union has resulted in two children, namely: H. V., born March 30, 1889; and Vassar Paul, who died at thirteen years of age.

In politics, Mr. Eales is a staunch adherent of the Democratic party, and although he has never been inclined to seek political preferment, he keeps thoroughly informed in regard to the current issues in local and national affairs. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the I. O. O. F. and M. W. A. in Rushville, and he and his wife are members of the Christian Church of that place. Both are highly esteemed by all who know them.

EATON, Allen.—During the nine and thirty years of his occupancy of the same farm in Section 6, Camden Township, Allen Eaton has upheld the dignity, usefulness and progressiveness of his time-honored calling, and has proved that, with few advantages and little material help, men of definite purpose and determination may realize the dreams and expectations of their ambitious youth. It is not without arduous effort, failure and discouragement that Mr. Eaton has come to represent a dependable element in Schuyler County. This invariably must be the fate of a man who starts with nothing and by legitimate means, attains the ownership of 650 acres. Born in Knox County, Ohio, October 3, 1861, Mr. Eaton is a son of Joseph and Sarah (Crider) Eaton, natives of Pennsylvania and Virginia, respectively. Joseph Eaton was the son of an Irish immigrant who settled in Pennsylvania, and whose brother, General Eaton, helped to make the martial history of the Civil War, while adding to the fame of the enlisted men from Ohio. Joseph Eaton died in early life in 1842, and in 1856 his wife, and her two sons, Allen and John, moved to Vermont, Fulton County, Ill., in 1859 locating in Littleton, Schuyler County, where the mother died in 1860. Of her nine children, John was a soldier in the Mexican War and died on the Schuyler County farm in February, 1899; Jane is the widow of Henry Schoonover, of Brooklyn Township; Mary is the widow of John Dexter, of Pike County, Ill.; Catherine is the deceased wife of Harry Austin, of Seattle, Wash.; Martha became the wife of a Mr. Johnson, and both are deceased; and Ellen is the wife of L. D. Nichols, of Pike County, Ill.

When the Civil War broke out Allen Eaton was twenty years old, but as he was the sole support of his widowed mother he was persuaded not to enlist. After the death of his mother his brother John, and his sister Ellen, came to Camden Township, the latter for many years being a successful teacher. In 1864, Mr. Eaton invested in forty-three acres of land, which he soon after sold to Mr. Fisher, and then bought sixty-three acres in Section 22, Camden Township. This also was sold not long afterward and in 1869 he bought sixty-four acres in Section 6, which proved the nucleus of his present large property. This land had a log cabin on it, which long since has been replaced by a modern dwelling, and the years have witnessed continued improvements in every way known to the progressive and scientific farmer. At the present time the family owns 650 acres, all but fifty of which is tillable, and it is safe to say that no farm in the county has more to recommend it to the student of latter day agriculture. General farming is conducted on a large scale, and in the stock line preference is given to registered Aberdeen-Angus cattle, Poland-China hogs, and high bred draft and road horses.

April 5, 1867, Mr. Eaton was united in marriage to Sarah McKee, who was born in County Down, Ireland, and came to America with her parents when eight years old. Her father, William McKee, first stopped in the vicinity of Indianapolis, Ind., and a few years later moved to Schuyler County, where Mrs. Eaton grew to womanhood. She was the mother of five children: William, born April 26, 1868, married for his first wife Mabel McDonald, who became the mother of a daughter, Rena, now eight years old, and died September 24, 1903, his present wife being in maidenhood Annie Lynn; John Eaton, born March 10, 1870, married Pearl Anderson, and has two children, Lena and Lester; Frank, born August 23, 1873, his father's assistant on the home place and the comfort of his mother in her last days; Henry, born May 23, 1876, living with his father; and Roscoe, born May 31, 1879, also at home. These children have all been given a practical common school education, and the three sons who are at home are experienced and successful farmers. The death of the mother occurred February 11, 1900.

Mr. Eaton's political affiliations are with the Democratic party, but aside from casting his vote he has taken no active part in local political affairs. While not a member of any church, he is a liberal contributor to churches and benevolent organizations, and no effort at public improvement, material or otherwise, has failed to receive his hearty support. He has established a family in the county which maintains high standards of character and worth, and which, because of the largeness of its operations and the extent of its control, has been a leading factor in agricultural practice for many years.

EDMUNDS, Henry H.—One of the names connected with the attainment of the present and the promise of the future in Schuyler County, is that of Henry H. Edmunds, a public school educator for the past quarter of a century, and since 1901 Superintendent of Public Instruction in the city of Rushville. Mr. Edmunds is a virile example of the qualities of usefulness and control which he seeks to inculcate in the hundreds of pupils within his jurisdiction. His youth knew the weight of responsibility, and his professional qualifications are the result of self-sacrifice, resourcefulness and untiring perseverance.

Born in Gardner, Grundy County, Ill., April 28, 1868, Mr. Edmunds represents a family connected with the dawn of American history and the pioneering of Rhode Island, in which State settled his progenitor on this side of the water, Reuben Edmunds, a soldier during 1675-76 in the war of King Philip, chief of the Wampanoag Indians. In Providence, R. I., James Edmunds, great-grandfather of Henry H., was born in 1762, and while still a boy followed the martial fortunes of Washington during the Revolutionary war. James Edmunds married Freelove Olin, a native of Vermont, and eventually settled in Hartland, Niagara County, N. Y., where his son, Henry J. Edmunds, was born, the latter marrying Lucy Arnold, also a native of New York. Arnold Edmunds, son of Henry J., and father of Henry H. Edmunds, was born in Hartland, and became an early settler of Illinois, finally locating in Gardner, and recently Los Angeles, Cal., his present home. Through his marriage with Julia Clague, who was born in Rochester, N. Y., he became allied with a Manxman family. His wife's parents, Hugh and Mary (Corris) Clague, having been born in the Isle of Man.

In order to secure a higher education, Henry H. Edmunds taught in the country schools for a couple of years after completing his training in the high school of Gardner. In the fall of 1889 he entered the Illinois State Normal University, but as lack of funds necessitated further teaching, did not graduate therefrom until 1895. He since has pursued post-graduate work in the University of Chicago and the University of Illinois, and by examination previous to coming to Rushville, secured a life certificate as teacher in Illinois, and was Superintendent of Schools in Lovington, Moultrie County, and Atlanta, Logan County. Mr. Edmunds is a Republican in politics, a Baptist in religion, and a Mason socially. In 1900 he was united in marriage with Emma F. Washburn, a native of Danvers, Ill., and a graduate of the Illinois State Normal. Two sons have been born of the union, Arthur W. and Richard Henry. Mr. Edmunds is now located in Clinton, Ill., as Superintendent of the City Schools.

ELLIS, James D.—To the man who has spent more than half a century on the same farm, and who, since earliest youth, has known no other home save that afforded within its borders, or any means of livelihood save that made possible by the cultivation of its soil, an interest is developed that is scarcely possible of acquirement under other conditions. James D. Ellis was born in Kenton County, Ky., December 11, 1843, a son of James Ellis, a native of Kentucky, and grandson of Elijah Ellis, who was born in Virginia. For his first wife James Ellis married Nancy Harmon, also of the Bourbon State, and after her death in Oakland Township, Schuyler County, in 1846, returned to Kentucky and married Margaret Ann Harmon, sister of his first wife. He spent the first winter of his sojourn in Schuyler County in the village of Rushville, and the next year settled on the farm in Oakland Township, now owned and occupied by his son. This farm formerly was owned by William Willis, and when purchased by Mr. Ellis had few improvements, a large part of it being under timber and brush. No effort had been made at road making in the neighborhood, the public thoroughfares passing in all directions across his land. Mr. Ellis was enterprising and resourceful, however, and before his death cleared about 200 acres.

At the present writing (1907) James D. Ellis lies stricken with paralysis at his beautiful country home, and his family and many friends are greatly concerned regarding his condition. His life has been full of good deeds and industry, and under his wise guidance the work begun by his father has continued with very gratifying financial and general results. He has been a careful and conscientious farmer, has carefully and painstakingly reared his children, and has set a moral example which the younger generation would do well to emulate. In the present emergency he is fortunate in having capable, industrious sons to carry on his work and maintain his reputation for public spiritedness and good citizenship. Mr. Ellis received a common school education, and in 1869 married Mary Berry, a native of Rushville Township, and of the union there are six children; Edgar, a farmer of Oakland Township, who married Cora Tutt, and has two children, Marie and Francis; Arthur, also a farmer of Oakland Township, who married Anna Tutt, a native of Rushville Township, and mother of two children, Cora and Eva; Alice, wife of Edgar Rose, a farmer of Rushville Township, and mother of Ethel B. and Everett Rose; Grace, wife of Charles E. Garrison, living on the old home place; Lewis, a farmer of Sedgwick, Kan., husband of Maude (Bosworth) Ellis, and father of two children who died in infancy; and Walter, of Sedgwick, Kan., who married Ada Frisby.

The perpetuation of the character and deeds of the Ellis family in Schuyler County is practically assured, not only by the work of those who represent the first and second generation, but by many evidences of their forethought and generosity shared in common with their neighbors and friends in the community. For instance, out of respect to the life of the first Ellis, who established the family here, there has been built upon the Ellis farm a church and school house, both of which have been in active use for many years, the ground having been donated by the present owner of the property. Mr. Ellis never has been active in politics, but he has earnestly supported the Republican party, and always has stood for clean local government and office. He was just a year old when he came here in 1844, and the changes which have led up to the prosperity of the present are all vividly impressed upon his memory.

ERWIN, Lewis D.—During the summer of 1839 Lewis D. Erwin came overland from Toledo, Ohio, to Schuyler County, Ill., which since has been his home, and where for many years he was engaged in general farming and stock raising. He was born in Plattsburg, Clinton County, N. Y., July 1, 1815, and was educated in the public schools of New York, Ohio and Illinois. He is of a generation of whom there are now few living in any part of the country, for in 1906 he had passed the ninety-third mile post of his earthly pilgrimage, and few survived with whom he could renew the incidents which crowded his youth and early manhood. For the past fifty-five years he has lived in the same house in Rushville, and his pleasant face and kindly manner have been as familiar to the people of the town as are the many landmarks which indicate the transformation which has passed before his eyes.

The remote ancestors of Mr. Erwin were Scotch-Irish on the paternal side, and presumably German on the distaff side of the house. His paternal great-grandfather came from the North of Ireland in 1730, and located in Newark, N. J., where David Erwin, the paternal grandfather was born, and where the latter married Catherine Munson. Cornelius M. Erwin, son of David, and father of Lewis B., was born after his parent's removal to Fairhaven, Vt., and there he married Lucinda Fairman, a native of Rutland, Vt., and daughter of James Fairman, supposed to be of German ancestry. Both sides of the family were represented in the great struggle for American independence begun in 1776. David Erwin enlisted under the banner of Washington at the age of eighteen, and among his martial experiences crossed the Delaware with the great commander on that memorable Christmas night. James Fairman also was a soldier in the Revolution, enlisting from Vermont, and serving in three different regiments of the Colonial army.

Lewis D. Erwin established a home of his own in Schuyler County, November 12, 1843, marrying Elvira Wells, who was born in Henrietta, Loraine County, Ohio, and educated in the public schools of Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Erwin are the parents of the following children: David Douglas, Catherine P., Mathilda, Eliza, Elizabeth L., Emma, Lewis D., Jr., George Lemmel, Anna E., Sophia Bessie and Edward H. Mr. Erwin is a Democrat in politics, a Presbyterian in religion, and fraternally a Mason. His heart still is young, his interests many sided, and his outlook upon life broad and hopeful. He has walked always close to the heart of truth and integrity, and his richest legacy to those who shall succeed him is the confidence and good will of his fellow men.

FOOTE, George H.—The manufacture of woolen goods constitutes an important, if not extensive, commercial resource of Schuyler County, and the promotion of the industry has enlisted the brain, energy and lifelong activity of some of its foremost citizens. Chief among those who, at present, sustain an enviable reputation as manufacturers of this commodity is George H. Foote, a man of broad general experience, and thirty-two years of whose life has been devoted to his present business. Mr. Foote is the manager of the Rushville Woolen Mills, and one of the best known, most progressive and dependable commercial factors in the community. He comes honestly by his ability and inclination, for his father, John Foote, the establisher of the present mills, was an early and very prominent local manufacturer, and a resume of his life may be found elsewhere in this work.

George H. Foote was born in Eastern New Hampshire, July 9, 1861, and as a lad was taken by his parents to Charlestown, same State, where he acquired his primary education in the public schools. Subsequently removal was made to Otsego, Mich., and later to Rock Island, Ill., and from there to Rushville, where in 1874 George H. went to work in the Rushville Woolen Mills, of which his father was boss corder. In 1876 John Foote established the Rushville Hosiery Mills, in which his son was installed as manager and bookkeeper, a position which he since has maintained with credit to himself and the community. The mills are in a prosperous condition, and their products are known and used throughout a large area of country. They are equipped with the best modern machinery, and give employment to about twelve people the year round, extra hands being required in rush seasons.

By his marriage, in 1884, to Susan Weber, Mr. Foote became allied with another woolen manufacturing family, John Weber, the father of Mrs. Foote, being the pioneer of the business in Schuyler County. Mr. and Mrs. Foote became the parents of two children: George, who died at the age of eight years; and Edna, wife of Peter Olson, of Rushville, who has one child. Mr. Foote has taken a keen interest in Republican politics for many years, and has served as Alderman of the Third Ward, Rushville, several terms. He is socially connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Modern Woodmen of America. With his wife he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and for several years has been an official in the same. He is regarded as a man of business integrity and sound judgment, and as a friend of education, progress, social purity and honest municipal control.

FOOTE, John, (deceased.)—The Rushville Hosiery Factory was in continuous operation under the same management from the time of its establishment, in 1876, by John Foote, until the date of his death in 1906. The results achieved were such as might have been expected from a man of extended experience and thorough knowledge of the details of his business. Behind the success of Mr. Foote were the thought and labor of generations of his family as weavers and manufacturers of fabrics. He was born January 17, 1827, in Leeds, Yorkshire, Eng., the fifth city in population, and the chief woolen manufacturing center of England. While still a student in the public schools, he began to learn from his father, John Foote, the trade of cloth-dressing. The elder Foote also was born in Yorkshire, and from his father, in turn, learned the trade of weaving, which he followed during his entire active life. He married Margaret Hines, also born in England, and reared a large family, of whom three of his children, Frank, Mary and John, came to America.

John Foote followed the cloth-dressing trade in England until 1844, when he came to Boston, Mass., and later, in the interests of his business, made brief visits to Millbury, Cherry Valley, Foxboro, Oxford and Winchester. At Bridgewater, Mass., he broadened his knowledge by working at the boot and shoe trade until the beginning of the Civil War, when he moved to Newport, N. H. On March 20, 1865 Mr. Foote enlisted in Company K, Eighteenth Regiment, New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and served until the close of the war, being honorably discharged on May 6, 1865. He then spent a year in Charlestown, Mass., and thence went to Michigan, where he lived three years. He next became foreman of the Rock Island Woolen Mills, at Rock Island, Ill., and in 1874 came to Rushville, where two years later he established the Rushville Hosiery Factory.

At Foxboro, Mass., in 1846, Mr. Foote was united in marriage to Martha A. Childs, a native of Maine, and a daughter of Amos Childs. Mr. and Mrs. Foote were the parents of four sons and one daughter, namely: Charles F., Alfred A., Ada, John W. and George H. Charles F. is connected with the Ipsava (Ill.) Woolen Mills. George H. is a young man of exceptional promise, who, having been his father's business partner and right hand man, continued into another generation the occupation with which his family has so long been identified. John Foote was a typical representative of the English-American, whose inherent and substantial traits of character remained in full strength during more than half a century spent in another than his native clime. His career in this community constituted an impressive lesson in perseverance, upright living and high regard for the rights of his fellowmen. Mr. Foote died February 28, 1906, his excellent and faithful wife having passed away October 18, 1903. For many years both were active and useful members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which Mr. Foote long acted in an official capacity, and was influential in all the branches of church work. In political action, he was an ardent supporter of the principles of the Republican party. Fraternally, he was affiliated with the I. O. N. W., and was held in high regard by his comrades of the Grand Army of the Republic.

FOSTER, Hon. Alrick Mann.—An interesting study in early development and large usefulness is forthcoming in the career of Hon. Alrick Mann Foster, who, though only twenty-six years of age, has caused his fellow-citizens of Schuyler County to speculate upon his practical accomplishments and promising possibilities as an educator, law-maker and scientific farmer and stock raiser. Principally, however, Mr. Foster's claims to distinction rest upon his efforts as a stock-raiser, and Woodview Farm, whose many sided interests he controls, is unsurpassed among enterprises in the State devoted to the stock industry.

That Mr. Foster has reached his present eminence with surprising rapidity is due largely to the fact that the man and his work are boon companions, and each the complement of the other. He likes stock, has unbounded faith in its possibilities, cherishes ideals of accomplishment which will keep him unsatisfied with anything but the best, and delights in the health-giving and soul-satisfying compensations of rural existence. Born on the farm he now owns and occupies in Littleton Township, Schuyler County, January 15, 1881, he is the son of Alrick Mann and Susan (Dorinda) Foster, the former of whom swelled the brief list of cabin builders of 1832, and mention of whom may be found elsewhere in this work. Three-quarters of a century in the same county has developed no diminution of the popular regard for the honor and ability of the family, but on the contrary the character and labor of its members remains the encouraging goal of the rising generation.

After the death of the elder Foster in 1885, the son remained on the old place until moving with his mother to Rushville in 1890. Here he supplemented his earlier country school training by attendance at the high school, thereafter taking a course at the Rushville Normal and the Rushville Business College, graduating from the latter in the class of 1898. In the meantime his mother had returned to the farm in 1895, and after completing his education he joined her, and for three years combined agriculture with school teaching, achieving marked success in the latter capacity, and building up a reputation which brought him many practical inducements to continue as an educator. However, the call of the country rose above all other voices. He began to engage actively in stock raising, especially in the breeding of Ohio Improved Chester hogs, and along this line he has achieved more than anticipated success. Each year Mr. Foster catalogues his hogs, and each year witnesses a marked improvement in both the quality and quantity of his herd. Probably no one in this part of the State is better prepared to furnish hogs of this kind for breeding purposes, or is more thoroughly conversant with the many advantages credited to them. He has spared neither time nor expense in making his business a success, and the result has surpassed his most sanguine hopes. He also has a well-bred herd of registered Aberdeen-Angus cattle. Every department of his farm is considered from a scientific and business standpoint, and his facilities for maintaining high standards and continuous increase are unsurpassed. His hogs have a reputation far beyond the boundaries of the State, and are shipped to all parts of the Union.

By the seasoned veteran politicians concerned in the Democratic outlook in Schuyler County, Mr. Foster is regarded as promising official timber. His capacity for public service was emphatically endorsed in 1906 in his election, by an overwhelming majority, as a member of the lower house from the Thirtieth Senatorial District, comprising Tazewell, Mason, Menard, Cass, Brown and Schuyler Counties. In the House Mr. Foster developed rare gifts as a public speaker, championing not only the principles of his party, but showing thorough familiarity with the needs of the district which he represented. He is prominent socially as well as commercially, and is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. November 28, 1900, he was united in marriage to Anna Lee, a native of Schuyler County, and they are the parents of two daughters, Anita, born in 1904, and Lucile, born in 1907. Mr. Foster is a well informed and progressive man, energetic, resourceful, and filled with strong enthusiasm, the conqueror of many of life's obstacles, and an appreciator of the refinements and compensations of existence. He is a trustee of the National O. I. C. Swine Breeders' Association, the largest white hog breeders' association in the world, and is at present a candidate for re-nomination as Representative in the General Assembly.

FOWLER, John C.—At an early period in Schuyler County history, James Fowler, grandfather of John C. Fowler, the latter now one of the well known farmers of Brooklyn Township, came to this then heavily timbered and game filled region and built himself a cabin in a clearing. He had the sterling traits of the people of New England, among the early representatives of which were some of his ancestors, and he himself had imbibed his first impressions and early training from Massachusetts, where he was born and spent the impressionable years of his life. Journeying westward in search of larger opportunities, he pioneered first in Ohio, where he was married and started housekeeping, and where some of his children were born, among them John Fowler, the father of John C. The former was a small lad when the family located in Brooklyn Township, and in the year 1849 was united in marriage with Julia Ann Higgins, and of this union four children were born, of whom two died in infancy. Mrs. Mary J. Higgins another child, died on January 17, 1902, and Harrison, the only one of the four still surviving, is a resident of Oxnard, Cal. The mother of these children died April 15, 1856. During the year 1857 Mr. Fowler was married to Susannah Mason, and of this second union were born six children, namely: James A., who is a farmer in Morton County, Kan.; William H., John C. and H. Pinkney, who are farmers in Brooklyn Township; Henry Taylor, who died at the age of sixteen, and Dora May, who is the wife of John Higgins, of Brooklyn Township. Both the paternal and maternal grandparents of this family are now deceased, the former resting in Blackburn Cemetery and the latter, who died within a week of each other, about 1864, resting in Scott's burying ground.

After his marriage, John Fowler and his wife located in Brooklyn Township, and remained there for the balance of their lives. The elder Fowler was a quiet and industrious man, attending well to his own affairs and never meddling with those of other people. He was persistently industrious and reaped his reward accordingly, and was honored and respected for his uprightness and kindness of character. Politically he was an uncompromising Republican, and was active and helpful in the Methodist Protestant Church.

The usual tasks, diversions and advantages contributed to the development of John C. Fowler, and at the age of twenty-three years, in 1887, he was united in marriage to Alice Glandon, daughter of John Glandon, one of the pioneers and prominent farmers of Brooklyn Township. Mrs. Fowler was born on her father's farm in 1862, and is the mother of three children: Minnie Maude, born January 24, 1888; Serena May, born June 3, 1891; and Dwight L., born July 19, 1895. Mr. Fowler settled after his marriage on a farm he had previously purchased in Section 16, Brooklyn Township, and for twelve years was increasingly successful at general farming and stock raising. In 1899 he moved to what was known as the Glandon farm, also in Section 16, and which at that time had a small frame house but no barns. He at once began the improvement of this property, renewed the fences, erected shelter for his stock, and in 1907, having prospered in the new location, put up one of the finest and best equipped rural residences in Brooklyn Township. With his wife he now is the owner of 225 acres of tillable land, provided with the best of modern improvements and facilities for raising the stock and produce best adapted to this part of Illinois. From the time of his birth on the old Fowler farm in Brooklyn Township, February 4, 1864, Mr. Fowler has known no other field of activity than his present surroundings, and in them he has found ample opportunity for working out a sane and wholesome destiny. For many years he has been a supporter and trustee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and a conscientious voter of the Republican ticket.

GARRISON, George.—The State of Illinois is noted throughout the country for its thoroughbred live stock, its Durham cattle having even more than a national reputation. The day has long passed since the live stock industry was conducted in a hap-hazard manner; when the cattle, horses, sheep and swine were turned loose to get their living at their own sweet will, and land which was too poor to cultivate was given up to them. Their wants are now forestalled and met almost as if they were human beings, and their breeding and raising are conducted along carefully considered and scientific lines. There are few citizens of Illinois to whom this grand development in agriculture can more justly be attributed than to the late George Garrison, the pioneer of Littleton Township, Schuyler County, who, through his sturdy labors and rare management, became one of the leading farmers and live stock men of Central Illinois. He was the first to introduce thorough-bred Durham cattle into Schuyler County, and was also very prominent in improving the breed of horses and hogs.

Mr. Garrison was born in Butler County, Ohio, on the 16th of June, 1809, the seventh child of Jonathan and Mary Garrison. He remained at home only until he was ten years of age, when his mother died, and as the family was large and the father in poor circumstances, George commenced to earn his own living at an age when most boys have not long been in the school room. While still in his teens, he applied to a man by the name of Giphart for work of any kind, and was assigned the task of chopping wood and clearing land at four dollars per month. He clung to this task until something better offered, which proved to be chopping wood at twenty cents per cord, and at this, and similar work, he continued until he was about sixteen years of age, when he abandoned it for labor on the Miami Canal. After being thus employed for a year, he obtained a situation in a distillery at a salary of eight dollars per month, and during the two years of his work there saved a small sum of money, which he laid aside for further use. His farm work for the succeeding two years brought him nine dollars per month, and his next employment as superintendent of a distillery was at an advance to eleven dollars per month, the young man holding his position during the life of the business, which proved to be eighteen months. Through his persistent labor and self-denying economy he had now saved enough money for the purchase of two colts, but after keeping them for some time he abandoned this first live stock venture in favor of a patent right, of which he finally lost complete control, leaving him experience as his only asset. This proved to him of the utmost value, as he never thereafter ventured into the ways of speculation in an unfamiliar field.

At this epoch in his life Mr. Garrison decided upon the course which has anchored so many other young men in a bright and prosperous haven; he determined to get married and settle down to found a home and household. To this end he borrowed twenty-five dollars for the purchase of his wedding suit, and on March 19, 1830, was united to Miss Sarah Vaile, like himself a native of Butler County, Ohio. She was a daughter of Henry and Pernelia Vaile, and born on the 15th of November, 1810. After his marriage, Mr. Garrison rented land, and, through a friend, procured a team of horses, thereby harvesting two crops. But his progress was too slow in such a conservative and thickly settled State as Ohio, and, hearing many favorable reports of the prosperity of Illinois, concluded to seek a home in the prairies of that new country, where land was cheap and where energy and enterprise were at a premium. Accordingly, in September, 1833, with his family, consisting of his wife and two children, he started overland for Central Illinois, and on the 5th of the following October arrived on the banks of Sugar Creek, Schuyler County, and drew up his team in preparation for a permanent residence. At this time he possessed two horses and a wagon and $363 of hard-earned cash. He immediately traded one of his horses and his wagon, with one hundred dollars in money, for a claim of 240 acres on Sugar Creek, and established his household in a little log cabin, and in the succeeding fifty-four years saw his family circle expand by the addition of nine children (only one of whom died), reared his sons and daughters to ways of industry and morality, and, with the continuous improvement of his property and the splendid growth of his live stock interests, became one of the most prosperous and prominent men of Central Illinois. Mr. Garrison entered this first tract of land at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, borrowing the purchase money of Jacob Sharp, of Fulton County, Ill., and paying him thirty per cent interest for the loan. He remained there for seven profitable years, after which he sold the property and bought a farm in Section 26, Littleton Township, Schuyler County, adding to it, periodically, until he was the owner of 840 acres in a body, and all within the township. For many years before his death this was considered one of the finest farms in Central Illinois, especially for live stock. His busy and useful life ended June 6, 1887, and the good wife, to whose womanly care and faithful management he gratefully accorded much of his success in life, followed him to the Great Beyond on the 6th of October, 1888. For many years they had been earnest members of the Christian Church.

On the 10th of March, 1880, the popular and venerable couple had celebrated their golden wedding, upon which occasion they received many testimonials of affection from children, grandchildren and old-time friends. Perhaps the most unique feature of the anniversary was the presentation by the white-haired bridegroom to his great-grandson, Ebenezer Cordell, of the coat, for which he paid in borrowed money but in which he so proudly stood when he was married to the faithful woman of his choice, fifty years before.

Mr. Garrison was a life-long Democrat, casting his first vote for Andrew Jackson in 1836. He was a consistent voter, but never engaged in politics as an office-seeker. Except to be known as a thorough and progressive agriculturist, he was unambitious in life, and that aim he accomplished to the full. He was a moral and helpful character in all the walks of life, and his domestic relations were ennobled by the most earnest solicitude for the comfort and general well-being of those dependent upon him. In a word, he was a large hearted and strong minded man, whose conduct was always guided by the moral principles of Christianity.

During their long and happy married life ten children were born to Mr. and Mrs. George Garrison, the first two being natives of Butler County, Ohio, and the other eight of Schuyler County, Ill. They were as follows: Mary, now the wife of David Fox, a resident of Coffee County, Kan.; Amy, who became the wife of Ebenezer Vaile, both of whom are deceased; Permelia, Mrs. James Beck, of Brooking, S. D.; Henry, who lives at Industry, McDonough County, Ill.; Margaret, wife of Aaron Shusley, of Lewistown, Ill.; George, who also lives in Industry, Ill.; Rebecca, wife of John Forsyth, who resides in Missouri; Amelia, who became the wife of George Kirkham, farmer of Littleton Township; Frances, who died at the age of nine years; and William E., whose sketch is elsewhere published. At the time of the writing of this work (fall of 1907) there were eight living children, sixty-nine grand-children and eleven great-grand-children.

GARRISON, William E., one of the most successful and best-known farmers and stock raisers of Schuyler County, Ill., is a native of the county, having been born in Section 26, Littleton Township, March 25, 1851. He is a son of George and Sarah (Vaile) Garrison, the latter born November 15, 1810, and died October 6, 1888. The career of George Garrison is portrayed in a separate record appearing in this connection, and details concerning his family are therein given. The youth of William E. Garrison was passed on the home farm, and his education was received in the district schools of Littleton Township and in the Rushville school. On January 15, 1873, he was married to Elnora Leggy, who was born in Lincoln County, W. Va., February 26, 1852, a daughter of Lewis and Melvina (Finch) Leggy. In 1859, her parents went from West Virginia to Ohio, and subsequently located in Missouri. Thence, in 1871, the family came to Schuyler County, Ill., settling in Littleton Township, and moving some time afterwards to Buena Vista Township, and there her mother died.

After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Garrison made their home on the old homestead until 1890, and there the births of all their children occurred, as follows: Della, born August 10, 1873; Charles, born November 9, 1874; James W., born September 14, 1877; Nora A., born January 19, 1886; and George L., born April 2, 1889. Della is the wife of Charles W. Young, a farmer in Buena Vista Township, and they are the parents of two children—Edmond Dewey and Elnora L.; Charles, who is also engaged in farming in the same township, married Grace Ellis; James W. married Mary Grier, by whom he had one child, Maurice J., born on the paternal farm in Section 25, Littleton Township; Nora A. is the wife of Harry Settles, a farmer in Rushville, and has two children—Mgdeline Clarice and Harold G.; and George L. is at home. In 1890,

Mr. Garrison bought a tract of land adjoining Rushville on the north, where he has since lived. He is now the owner of 341 acres of some of the best land in Littleton Township, lying in Section 25, besides having a number of town lots in Marshall, Logan County, Okla. He has a very fine home, and is one of the leading farmers and stock-raisers of Schuyler County, his specialties in breeding being Shorthorn and Red-Polled Angus cattle, and full blooded Duroc Jersey hogs. He also keeps a number of fine Jersey cows for dairy purposes.

Politically, Mr. Garrison has always been a supporter of the Democratic party, and while entertaining no ambition for public office, takes an intelligent and earnest interest in civic affairs. In all enterprises intended to promote the welfare of the township and county, he has taken an active part, discharging faithfully the duties pertaining to citizenship. Socially, he is affiliated with the Knights and Ladies of Security. He and his worthy helpmate are members of the Christian Church, and both are recognized as very useful members of the community.

GEER, Benjamin F.—Through the course of a life covering a span of more than one-half century, Mr. Geer has made his home in Schuyler County, and has risen to the rank of one of the most prosperous and progressive farmers of Browning Township, where he was born in November of 1852, and where the responsibilities of patriotic citizenship have been efficiently discharged. In the course of his life it has been his privilege to witness many changes in his locality. When he was a boy he attended school, first in the Sackville district, and later in the Hawkeye district, in Browning Township. The schools of those days were far inferior to those of the present time. Text-books were few, methods of instruction were crude, teachers were often illy prepared for their duties, and the equipment of the school was meagre. Along other than educational lines he also has witnessed remarkable changes. Methods of agriculture have been revolutionized since his boyhood. Hand labor has been largely superseded by machinery, and now a farmer has need of a fair knowledge of mechanics in order to conduct his work without exasperating delays. The telephone and the rural free delivery have brought the world to the farmer's door. All of these improvements he has seen, besides many others scarcely less important.

On the farm on Section 28, Browning Township, where he now resides, Benjamin F. Geer was born, a son of Dyer A. and Anna Eliza (Arnold) Geer, natives of Hamilton County, Ohio. The father was born in 1811 and, at the age of twenty-one years, came to Illinois, settling in Schuyler County in 1832 while the country was yet a wilderness of heavy timber from which the Indians had but recently disappeared. After a time he was joined by his brothers, Sidney and Orris Geer, and he took up 200 acres of congress land on Section 28, Browning Township. On his claim he put up a cabin and hither brought his bride, who had been orphaned in childhood and had accompanied an older brother and sister from Ohio to Illinois. She was spared to a good old age, passing away October 6, 1901, sustained to the last by the firm Christian faith which had been the anchor of her earlier years. The father died in February of 1875. He, too, had been a sincere believer in the doctrines of Christianity and had endeavored in his life to exemplify the teachings of the Savior. During young manhood he had been converted in the Methodist Episcopal Church, but later he identified himself with the Christian Church, in which for years he officiated as Sunday School Superintendent, and to whose missionary enterprises he was a generous contributor. During the existence of the Whig party he supported its tenets. On the organization of the Republican party he endorsed its principles and ever afterward supported its men and measures.

In the family of Dyer A. Geer there were nine children, two of whom died in infancy. Those who attained mature years were as follows: James, who is engaged in farm pursuits in Fulton County, Ill.; Sidney A., who settled at Atlanta, Phelps County, Neb.; and there died about 1901; Melinda, wife of F. M. Skiles, a farmer in Browning Township; Milton, who enlisted in the One Hundred and Nineteenth Illinois Infantry during the Civil War and died in the service at Memphis, Tenn.; Hiram, who died on the old homestead in 1882; Benjamin F., of Browning Township; and Lonisa, who married James Brines and resides at Ukiah, Cal. After completing the studies of the district schools Benjamin F. Geer attended college at Abingdon, Ill.; and on his return home taught two terms of school in Union district. With his brother he bought the interest of the other heirs in the old homestead and shortly afterward established domestic ties, being united in marriage, September 20, 1875, with Miss Delilah A. Rebman, who was born March 30, 1857, a daughter of John Rebman. (See sketch of Adam Rebman for the family record).

The family of Mr. and Mrs. Geer comprises the following children: Alena, who was born September 18, 1876, and married Ray Walton, a farmer of Browning Township, by whom she has one child, Dail; Frederick, who was born January 7, 1879, who married Jessie Spillers, and has four children, Burton, Bernice, Clifford and Floyd, their home being on a farm in Browning Township; Homer S., who was born January 13, 1881, and married Lusetta Walton, by whom he has two children, Pearl and Ansel; Hiram, who was born August 11, 1883, and married Ada Klokner, by whom he has two children, Dorothy and Neil; Leroy, who was born November 10, 1885, and married Mabel Haffner; Milton, who was born April 20, 1887; Harland, born December 15, 1890; Annie F., born January 3, 1895; and Eugene, born October 15, 1898. During 1883 the family erected a large residence on their farm, and thither they removed from the old cabin home that had been the scenes of many happy gatherings and much quiet enjoyment. The farm originally comprised 157 1-3 acres, but a part of this Mr. Geer has sold to his children, and now owns eighty-six acres, on which he has ornamental and shade trees, also an orchard of one hundred peach and three hundred apple trees. In former years he was a Republican, but now gives his influence to the Prohibition party. With his wife he holds membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the up-building of which he has been actively interested. His conversion took place many years ago when he embraced the United Brethren faith, but he soon united with the denomination to which he now belongs. In the twilight of his busy life, sustained by the recollection of an honorable career, cheered by the hope which religion gives, and esteemed by the people in whose midst he has always lived, he is enjoying the fruits of the busy years of the past and is reaping the reward of a well-spent life.

GLANDON, John A., (deceased).—Substantially and prominently identified with the history of Schuyler County from the time of his arrival there in 1856 until his lamented decease on June 22, 1906, John A. Glandon is recalled as a man of great energy and of peculiar ability as a trader and speculator, and unquestioned courage and good judgment in pushing his projects to a successful issue. His varied and many sided career is indelibly stamped upon the affairs of his environment, and his unique and forceful personality will not soon be forgotten by those who were privileged to share his friendship or enthusiasm. Mr. Glandon was born in Moorefield, Harrison County, Ohio, February 5, 1824, and therefore lived to be eighty-two years, four months and seventeen days old.

The son of William Glandon, who was born in 1780, and of the latter's wife, Nancy Magdalene (Peacock) Glandon, Mr. Glandon's maternal grandfather was a soldier in the Revolutionary War who had laid his claim warrant for 160 acres of land on the historic Mount Vernon home. William Glandon had eleven children, all of whom attained maturity, and one of whom, William, his father's namesake, lives in Mount Pleasant. John A., in youth had but a limited education, but he developed ingenuity of a high order, and was especially cut in the mold of a trader. Left fatherless at the age of twelve years, and the sole support of his widowed mother, he contracted for employment by a mail carrier, near Moorefield, Ohio, at five dollars per month—a princely sum for toil in those days and for that kind of occupation. At the same time he delved into everything that promised financial return, and at one time bought a drove of a hundred turkeys, which he drove to market at Louisville, Ohio, a distance of eighty miles. He was fortunate in this venture, notwithstanding that he lost quite a number of birds on the way. When his powers were more matured the trading instinct was still uppermost, and he contracted to build two miles of the Pan Handle Railroad in Harrison County, Ohio, and then went to the mouth of the Big Sandy River, in Kentucky, and built two miles of the Lexington & Big Sandy Railroad in each instance making a success of his large undertaking.

Mr. Glandon came with his mother to Schuyler County in 1856, and the mother made her home with him until 1866, when during a visit to McDonough County, she sickened and died at the age of seventy-two years. In Schuyler County Mr. Glandon bought 125 acres of land in Section 21, Brooklyn Township, paying therefor $13 per acre, the land having on it a rude log cabin but no other improvements. He cleared practically all of this land, built a barn forty by seventy feet with basement, and also cattle barns, having stalls for a hundred head of stock. In 1882 he bought the Brooklyn Mills, which he rebuilt and fitted with modern grist machinery, and which proved a fine success. Previous success enabled him to invest in almost any enterprise in the county, and all of his means were gotten legitimately and without the sacrifice of principle or encroachment on the rights of his fellow men. At one time he owned 900 acres of land, and was a large raiser of sheep, having, during the Civil War, 1,700 head of Merinos, the wool of which netted him a dollar a pound. In 1865, in company with William Horney, he went to Graystone, Texas, with a team of horses after an old couple that had become stranded, traveling without a murmur a distance of 2,000 miles. The task was arduous and the way dangerous in those days of civil strife, and the men heaved a deep sigh of relief when they again landed in the county with the old couple in safety. Nor did this venture represent the extent of his thoughtfulness and kindness to others, for his hand was ever in his pocket, and he gladly gave whenever the cause had the least semblance of justifiability.

In Tuscarawas County, Ohio, Mr. Glandon married Delilah Baumister, who preceded him to the other world about seven weeks before his own death, on June 3, 1906. This couple journeyed together in great harmony, and it was considered providential that their exit from the stage of affairs left neither desolate for long. They were the parents of four children: Belinda J., wife of Samuel McKelvin, a farmer of the vicinity of Lincoln, Neb.; James W., on the old home farm; Alice, wife of John C. Fowler, represented elsewhere in this work; and Edgar D., a telephone manager of the plant at Pittsfield, Ill.

GLASS, David H.—Many of the superior compensations which lie in wait for the capable and learned exponent of legal science have fallen to the lot of David H. Glass, whose professional association with Rushville dates from 1878. Mr. Glass was born on a farm in Ripley County, Ind., in 1854, a son of John and Ann (Major) Glass, the former a native of Washington County, Pa., and the latter born in County Waterford, Ireland. Craving a broader life than that promised as an agriculturist, Mr. Glass devised means of securing the necessary higher education, and from the public schools of Crawfordsville entered Wabash College, Ind. He came to Illinois in 1871 and began the study of law, entering the law department of the University of Iowa, at Iowa City, from which he took his degree in 1878. Upon locating in Rushville in 1878 he became the partner of S. B. Montgomery, an association amicably and profitably continued for nearly twenty years, until the removal of his partner to Quincy, Ill. Since then he has conducted an independent practice, and has been connected, on one side or the other, with many of the important suits which have come up for adjustment in the city and county.

For years Mr. Glass has been active in connection with Democratic politics, his first office being that of State's Attorney, to which he was elected in 1884, and in which he served three terms. In 1901 he was elected Mayor of Rushville, and his administration resulted in many improvements in the municipal government. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity. December 21, 1881, occurred the marriage of Mr. Glass to Sarah G. Worthington, of Rushville, and of this union there have been born two children, Ruth W. and Charles, the latter now being deceased. To his professional practice Mr. Glass brings the combination of tact, ripe experience and unswerving integrity, and as such he is highly honored in a community which has profited by more than quarter of a century of his citizenship.

GREENLEAF, Peter.—The name of Greenleaf first became known in Illinois in 1836, through the advent of Joseph and Peter Greenleaf, sons of Peter Greenleaf of New Jersey, a participant in the War of 1812. One of the brothers, Peter, settled near White Oak Springs, Brown County, Ill., and at his death there in 1857 left two sons and two daughters, but only two of the number are now living. Joseph, a resident of Steamboat Rock, Iowa, and his sister, Mary, who lives near Whitehall, ———. The elder of the two immigrating brothers, Joseph, settled in Astoria, Fulton County, Ill., locating on a soldier's claim on Section 6. The warrant for this claim was made out in favor of Peter Greenleaf, the grandfather, as a partial compensation for services rendered in the War of 1812. It was about this time, 1840, that Joseph Greenleaf was married, and together the young people set up housekeeping in the rude log cabin which Mr. Greenleaf had erected on the land. Though crude on the exterior and lacking in many comforts in its interior furnishings, the genial, happy home-life within made up in generous measure for the lack of material things. This continued to be the family home until 1868, when the father sold the old home place and came to Schuyler County, purchasing 160 acres of land from Tom McCreery on Sections 13 and 14, in Birmingham Township. Here he built a comfortable residence for his family and brought the land to a high state of cultivation, and here, too, his earthly life came to a close in 1904. His death was looked upon as a public loss, not only to the community in which he was then living, but also in Fulton County, where so many years of his younger life had been passed. To all he was known as the embodiment of generosity and liberality, for none who appealed to him were ever known to leave his door without assistance. During his younger years he had joined the Masonic order, was for many years a member of the Christian Church, and politically was a supporter of Democratic principles. He was born in Hoboken, N. J., April 6, 1818, came to Illinois in 1836, and for sixty-eight years gave the strength of his sturdy manhood in assisting in the reclamation of this commonwealth and making it the peer of States in the Middle West. Before her marriage his wife was Miss Sarah Dale, a native of Indiana, who came to Illinois with her mother, her father, Samuel Dale, having given his life for his country's cause in the War of 1812.

Seven children were born into this family on the Fulton County homestead, their names in order of birth being as follows: Nathaniel of Centralia, Wash.; Damaris Rose, the wife of James H. Rose, of Lamar, Mo.; Samuel, of Centralia, Wash.; Alice, of Table Grove, Ill., the widow of George R. Sellars; Alonzo, of Joplin, Mo.; and Stephen, also a resident of Table Grove. The mother of these children died on the Fulton County homestead June 27, 1867, leaving a bereaved family and many friends whose acquaintance dated back to pioneer days. She was not permitted to see all of her children grow to maturity.

The second child in his parents' family, Peter Greenleaf, was born in Astoria Township, Fulton County, Ill., December 2, 1845. With considerable irregularity he attended the district school adjacent to his boyhood home and, when not in school, he was kept occupied with the duties which fell to his lot on the home farm. Notwithstanding the hardships which came with life on the frontier, Mr. Greenleaf looks back upon those days as the most joyous of his whole life, parents and children all contributing to the good humor and happy atmosphere which always filled the little home. His marriage on September 3, 1868, united him with Miss Sarah E. Cook, the daughter of Peter Cook, of Oakland Township, Schuyler County. For some years after his marriage he worked as a farm hand in the employ of others, but in the meantime he laid by from his earnings all that could be spared after furnishing necessities for the family and in time was enabled to purchase land on his own account. This consisted of sixty-two and a half acres on Section 8, Emmett Township, McDonough County, Ill., where for twenty-two years—or until 1904—he made his home continuously. It was in the year just mentioned that he returned to his boyhood home, Schuyler County, and bought 202 acres on Section 24, Birmingham Township, a farm which embodies some of the finest land in Schuyler County, and on which he raises all of the grains common to a well-established Illinois farm.

Eleven children were born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Greenleaf, but of this number three died in infancy. The eldest living child, Joseph, married Miss Nona Sells, by whom he has four children—Pauline, Joseph, Alice and Sterling. Annie became the wife of John W. Gleason, of Birmingham Township, and is the mother of five children—Roy, Pearl, Mary, Charles and Ethel. Eva, the wife of Joseph McGee, of Chattaroy, Wash., has two children—Frances and John. Samuel is a resident of Rushville, Ill. John S. is the next in order of birth. Alice, the wife of Allie Morrell, is the mother of two children—Vernot and Dorothy E. Ross C. and Frank M. complete the family. The latter married Lottie Saultz, and they have two children, Peter and Henry. Mr. Greenleaf is nominally a Democrat, but is liberal in his views, and votes for the man best suited to the office in question, regardless of party. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Masonic Order and with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

HABER, Daniel F.—The name of Daniel F. Haber is associated with all that is substantial in character, excellent in farming and admirable in social life in Rushville Township. His claims to consideration are further increased by worthy political services, not the least important of which is his tenure in office as Highway Commissioner. To this office he was twice elected, and his unceasing activity resulted in marked improvement of the public thoroughfares, and an increase of local pride in their hardness, smoothness and adaptability to all weather conditions. By a student of nations it is declared that no public utility so faithfully indexes the character of a people as its arteries of travel, and the present condition of the roads in Rushville Township would seem to indicate a very high standard of citizenship.

Born on a farm in Littleton Township, Schuyler County, November 16, 1865, Mr. Haber is a son of Thomas Haber, mention of whom may be found elsewhere in this work. His boyhood was spent after the fashion of most farmers' sons in average circumstances, and he combined the many-sided work of the farm with irregular attendance at the district school, and being naturally studious, he readily devoured such books as came within the range of his using. At the age of twenty-two his life shifted into a groove of larger responsibility through his marriage, in February, 1887, to Lotta Griffith, daughter of Mayland Griffith, and a native of DeWitt County, Ill. The young people continued to live on the Haber farm until 1888, when Mr. Haber rented property in Bethel Township, McDonough County, the following year moving to Littleton Township, Schuyler County, where he rented land until 1892. He then moved to the farm which he now owns and occupies, containing 150 acres in Section 21, Rushville Township. He is an extensive breeder, feeder and shipper of stock, especially hogs and cattle, and raises on an average between 100 and 150 acres of corn yearly, the entire amount being used in his business. He ships from fifty to seventy-five head of cattle, and from 200 to 400 hogs every year, and is one of the most successful men in this line in the county. Since 1892 he has made steady progress in his life, has acquired influence and authority in the community, and has reason to regard as fortunate the incentive which led him to settle in this part of Schuyler County.

Mr. Haber subscribes to Democratic principles, and he was elected Road Commissioner on that ticket. He is socially connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, having joined the order in 1898, and is also a member of the Rushville Lodge of Modern Woodmen of America. Both he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and to this, as to many other causes, he is a generous contributor. Mr. and Mrs. Haber are the parents of the following children: Carl, born November 28, 1888; Mabel P., born December 29, 1891; Paul, born March 24, 1893; Clark G., born April 18, 1894; Daniel G., born April 9, 1896, died August 1, 1896; Vera, born June 2, 1897; Mary, born August 6, 1898; Harold, born October 4, 1903; and Margaret, born March 23, 1905.

Mrs. Haber was born April 19, 1869, and represents an early family of Schuyler County. Her father, Mayland Griffith, and her mother, Isabella (Shoe) Griffith, were natives of Muskingum County, Ohio, and came early to DeWitt County, Ill., where Mrs. Haber was born. The Griffiths arrived in Schuyler County in 1873. The mother died in Cass County, the father being also deceased. They were the parents of thirteen children, nine of whom are living; John, a resident of California; Newton, a farmer of McDonough County, Ill.; Joseph, a resident of Bloomington, Ill.; Parlet, of Hancock County, Ill.; Grant; Dora, wife of John Whitehead, of Grand Bluff, Ill.; Nancy Jane; Maretta; and Anna.

HABER, John C.—Schuyler County is fortunate in the possession of many native sons whose continued loyalty to its institutions and opportunities make for its permanent and most substantial well being, and who, in the same occupation as their sires, are realizing the advantages of latter day methods of operation. To this class belongs John C. Haber, owner of 160 acres of land in Section 19, Camden Township. Mr. Haber was born in Buena Vista Township, Schuyler County, April 28, 1879, a son of Thomas Haber, mention of whom may be found elsewhere in this work.

Mr. Haber early made himself useful around his father's farm, devoting such time as he could spare to attendance at the district school, and sharing the common diversions of the youth of the neighborhood. September 12, 1891, he married Emma Miller, a native of Brown County, Ill., and daughter of Thomas and Amanda (Mounce) Miller, pioneers of Brown County, the former of whom is deceased. Mrs. Miller, who still makes her home in Brown County, is the mother of six children, one of whom died in infancy. Of those living, Nettie is the wife of William Rigg, of Brown County; Hattie, wife of Lafayette Avery (see sketch of James Avery); Edsel, living on the old place in Brown County; Pearl, wife of Fred Kerr, a farmer of Brown County; and Mrs. Haber. Mr. and Mrs. Haber rented a farm for a year after their marriage, and in the fall of 1892 bought 160 acres of land in Camden Township, known as the old Eugene Cady farm, and located thereon in the spring of 1893. Under the wise control of Mr. Haber his farm has developed great resource and fertility, and is practically demonstrating the advantages of a man at the helm who thoroughly understands the science of farming. He keeps on hand a high grade of horses, cattle and hogs, has excellent barns and outhouses and a comfortable dwelling. Mr. Haber is one of the farmers who recognize no limit to their advancement, and who, through the medium of periodicals and conventions keep pace with the ideas of men prominent in the world of agriculture. He is the parent of one son, Thomas C., born in January, 1903. Mr. Haber is a Democrat in politics, and in religion is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

HABER, Thomas.—The sturdy, indomitable spirit, unflagging industry and thrifty frugality characteristic of the German-American, is everywhere conspicuously manifest in the industrial activities of the United States, and of the vast number of honest, clear-headed and enterprising sons of Germany who have helped to promote the welfare of the land of their adoption, Thomas Haber is one of the most worthy representatives of the agricultural class, and has won a world-wide reputation in the raising of hogs. In harmony with the general character of Mr. Haber is the fact that, when he arrived in Schuyler County, his last cent had been spent for lodging for a friend who accompanied him from Ohio. From this meagre and discouraging beginning he has advanced to one of the foremost farmers and stock raisers of the United States. He was born in Tragelhoechstadt, Germany, July 25, 1841, a son of Andrew and Margaret (Milburger) Haber, natives also of the Fatherland and farmers by occupation. He received his preliminary education in his native land, and in 1852 accompanied the rest of the family to the United States, locating on a farm in the vicinity of Dayton, Ohio. Here the father died at the age of seventy-nine years, the mother surviving him until her eighty-ninth year.

Thomas Haber was about twenty-three years old when he left Ohio with a friend and came to Illinois in 1864, locating on a farm in Littleton Township, Schuyler County, which he rented for two years. He then moved to Buena Vista Township, which has since been his home, and where he now owns 200 acres in Section 13, also forty-four acres in Section 18, Rushville Township, and forty acres in Littleton Township, making in all 284 acres. He has a modern farm house, well constructed barns and outbuildings, and the most practical of agricultural implements. He is a staunch believer in progressive agriculture, and leaves no stone unturned to improve his methods, his farm and his opportunities in general. In this way he has come to be regarded as one of the most thorough, painstaking and substantial farmers in Schuyler County.

The marriage of Mr. Haber to Mary Bovey occurred October 6, 1864, Mrs. Haber being a native of Greene County, Ohio, born August 15, 1844. She is a daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Miller) Bovey, natives of Maryland and Pennsylvania, respectively, who moved from Ohio to Illinois in 1863, locating in the vicinity of Littleton where they improved a fine farm, and where both died at an advanced age. To Mr. and Mrs. Haber have been born eight children: Daniel, born November 16, 1865, married Lota Griffith, is a farmer in Rushville Township, and has eight children—Carl, Pearl, Paul, Clark, Vera, Mary, Harold and Margaret; Margaret J., born November 13, 1867, wife of Percy Griffith, a farmer of Hancock County, Ill., and mother of Bessie Griffith; Fannie E., born April 18, 1870, and died at the age of one year; Grace M., born January 18, 1875, wife of Albert Tomlinson, a farmer of Huntsville Township, and mother of six children—Ruth, Cecil, Derward, Roy, Mary and Francis; John, born April 28, 1879, married Emma Miller, has one child, Thomas, and is a farmer in Camden Township; Allie, born October 10, 1882, the wife of George Logan, a farmer of Littleton Township, and has one child, Raymond; Edna, born August 6, 1882, living at home; and William, born September 6, 1888.

In political affiliation Mr. Haber is a Democrat, but is liberal in his political ideas. He is fraternally connected with the Rushville Lodge, No. 24, I. O. O. F., and in his religious views is a Presbyterian. He is considered an exemplary and useful citizen, and his children have been trained to fashion their lives along broad and practical and noble lines.

Mr. Haber is one of the most successful breeders of hogs in the world. In 1906, he exhibited his hogs at the Fat Stock Show in Chicago, and won the third prize for the best carload lot. In 1907, at the same exhibition he won the first prize for the best carload lot, and also the championship of the world. He also has won many prizes on stock and horses at the county fairs.

HALE, Elam Bliss.—In considering the ancestral connections of Elam Bliss Hale, an honored farmer living in Section 12, Birmingham Township, Schuyler County, one's memory again reverts to that greatly admired hero and courageous patriot, Nathan Hale, a graduate of Yale College, a captain under General Washington in the Revolutionary War, and who, upon being sent by his chief to secure information concerning the British in New York, was captured as a spy and at twenty-one years of age, executed, September 22, 1776, by order of Sir William Howe. Nathan Hale's successors and relatives have been scattered to the four corners of this great country, but each and all gladly avow their connection with him, and their admiration for his intrepid loyalty and high character. Thomas, William and Timothy Hale came to America about Mayflower time, settling in New England, and from them descended three branches, Elam Bliss tracing his descent to William Hale. Josiah, son of William, brother of Nathan Hale, and grandfather of Elam, was born August 21, 1756, and died April 13, 1841. He married Abigail Joslin, born March 6, 1761, and died May 24, 1841. To Josiah and Abigail Hale were born the following children: Nathan, July 4, 1781; Josiah, February 3, 1783; James L., February 20, 1785; Nathan, Jr., October 13, 1786; Esther, September 24, 1788; Jessie, April 4, 1791; Achsah, January 18, 1793; and Abraham, January 26, 1799.

Abraham Hale, father of Elam Bliss Hale, first saw the light of day in Tyringham, Mass., and married Fannie M. Bliss, who was born in Towanda, Pa., February 26, 1810, and died in Bernadotte, Fulton County, Ill., August 20, 1860. Mr. Hale came to Bernadotte about 1840, but eventually went to Missouri, where he died July 26, 1872. Of his six children, Egbert C., born October 14, 1829, was the first Sheriff of Los Angeles County, Cal., who served through his entire term, went from there to the City of Mexico, married a Mexican woman, and for twenty-four years was connected with the office of the American Consul, finally dying there March 22, 1898, leaving a family of five children—Charles F., Abraham F., Adelaide, Matilda and Edmond R.; Abigail Hale, born March 2, 1831, died March 16, 1842; Lambert Hale, born in Westfield, N. Y., January 2, 1834, drove the first stage over the southern mail route from Santiago, Cal., to San Antonio, Texas, about 1856 or '57, died December 5, 1871, while serving as Chief of Police at Chetopa, Kan.; Elam Bliss Hale, subject of this sketch, born March 18, 1841; George Hale, born January 1, 1844, died September 6, 1845; and Mary A., born in Fulton County, Ill., November 16, 1850, and died September 22, 1851.

The youth of Elam Bliss Hale passed after the manner of the average country boy, and April 25, 1861, he married Mary Markey, a native of Harrison County, Ohio, born April 26, 1843. Mrs. Hale came with her parents to Illinois in 1859. (For further particulars regarding the Markey family, see sketch of Harvey B. Markey.) Mr. and Mrs. Hale have a son, Charles E., born in Birmingham, Schuyler County, August 2, 1867, and married, for his first wife, Addie Toland, born in March, 1879. Of this union there is a son, Charles E., who was born January 16, 1891. The second wife of Charles Hale formerly was Nora Mitchell, of Littleton Township, and of their union there are three children: Fannie L., Ruth L., and Forest Bliss. For his entire active life Mr. Hale has engaged in farming, but he has not led a narrow or inactive life, but by travel and reading has kept in touch with the general happenings the world over. In the 'sixties he spent some time in Colorado as a cow-boy, returning to Bernadotte Township, Fulton County, in December, 1865. For a time he combined farming and working in a saw-mill, and finally bought forty acres of land in Section 23, Birmingham Township, Schuyler County, to which he added until he was owner of 107 acres, which he sold in 1880. He then bought 120 acres in Sections 12 and 13, with the dwelling on Section 12, and here has since made his home. He has the original deed to his property signed by President James K. Polk.

Mr. Hale has filled a large need in the township, and besides setting an inspiring example of honesty and well directed industry, has filled many important local offices, including that of Clerk for eleven years, Assessor six terms, and member of the School Board twenty years. He is an uncompromising Republican, as was his father before him. Indeed Abraham Hale was so strong an Abolitionist during the war, that the K. K. K.'s set the night to kill him, but failed to hit their mark. Mr. Hale preserves well the traditions of his time-honored family, possesses the courtesy and consideration of true breeding and birth, and values as above price the qualities of honesty and fairness in dealing with his fellow men.

HALE, Jesse, a well known and prosperous farmer and stock raiser in Section 27, Littleton Township, Schuyler County, Ill., was born in Buena Vista Township, same county, June 14, 1856, a son of Joshua and Elizabeth (Bartlow) Hale, the father, born in New Madrid County, Mo., and the mother in Sangamon County, Ill. When a boy Joshua Hale was brought to Schuyler County by his parents, who were among the early settlers of the county. The family settled on a farm in Buena Vista Township, where Joshua Hale afterwards became the owner of 160 acres of land. This he sold in 1865, moving to Fremont County, Iowa, and there purchasing a hotel. In the following year, disposing of the hotel property, he returned to Schuyler County, and bought 160 acres on the site of the present village of Littleton. Several years later, he sold out and moved to Hancock County, Ill., where he afterwards bought a farm of 200 acres near Augusta. There he died May 18, 1895. His wife had preceded him to the grave, August 20, 1882, while living in Littleton Township, Schuyler County. They had a family of eight children, four of whom are deceased. Those surviving are as follows: Letha, who married George Ross, and is now a widow, living in Hancock County, Ill.; Jesse; Sadie, who became the wife of John Deweese, a resident of Hamilton, Hancock County; and Cora (Mrs. Marshall Randle), whose home is also in that county. Jesse Hale was brought up on the home farm, receiving his education in the common schools. Remaining with his parents until he reached the age of twenty-one years, he then bought eighty acres of improved land, but selling this three years later, purchased eighty acres in Section 27, of the same township, which he also retained three years. His next purchase was a farm in the vicinity of Pulaski, Hancock County, which he disposed of after living on it two years, when returning to Littleton Township, he bought 200 acres of improved land which is still his property. After living there until 1903, he bought forty acres in Section 27, upon which he has since made his home. He has been quite successful in his business enterprises, and besides general farming, has raised many head of Black-Poll'd Angus cattle, as well as horses and hogs in considerable numbers.

Mr. Hale has been twice married. The maiden name of his first wife was Abbie E. Davis, who was born in Worcester, Mass., and to whom he was wedded November 24, 1881. Two children were the result of this union, namely: Lelia S., born August 30, 1882, who became the wife of Asa Bartlett, and lives on her father's 200-acre farm; and Blanche E., who died in infancy, March 28, 1891. The mother of these children passed away in January, 1893. In October, 1894, Mr. Hale was united in marriage with Luella M. Wheat, who was born in Littleton Township, August 3, 1864, a daughter of John and Julia (Snyder) Wheat, natives of Kentucky, and a granddaughter, on the maternal side, of David and Lucinda Snyder.

In politics, Mr. Hale is a supporter of the Democratic party, and fraternally is affiliated with the I. O. O. F. Lodge No. 24, of Rushville. He is classed among the substantial farmers of his township, and is regarded as a useful citizen.

HALE, John Wesley.—The early associations of the subject of this sketch cluster around scenes in Schuyler County, whither he came with his parents at the age of three years. Since then he has risen to a position as one of the capable agriculturists of Camden Township, where he makes his home on Section 12. In connection with his first purchase of land it may be stated that he paid $100 for eleven acres, forming the nucleus of his present possessions. To raise the purchase money he sold a spotted mare for $80 and two calves for $8 each, thus raising $96, and with the balance of money he had on hand, he acquired a little tract with a primitive log cabin. During 1883 he erected a frame building, 16x26 feet, and now, by subsequent addition, he has a modern and commodious country home. At first he rented land adjoining his home place, but gradually he added to his possessions until now he owns altogether 215 acres on Sections 12 and 13, in Camden Township. In September, 1907, he added to this 120 acres more in Section 13, Camden Township.

The Hale family was established in Schuyler County by the grandfather of John Wesley Hale, who came here from New Madrid, Mo., and secured about 500 acres in Buena Vista Township.

The father, Jesse Hale, was born in Schuyler County, and married Rebecca Wardrup, who died in 1883. The last heard of the father was by letter written from Ottumwa, Iowa, in which he stated that he was about to go to the mining district of the Black Hills. Of his four children, James is living near Adams County, Ill.; John Wesley remains in Schuyler County; Drnsilla, deceased, was the wife of James Bartlett, a farmer in Buena Vista Township; and Mary, deceased, was the wife of Charles Warrington.

Born near Salem, Iowa, January 13, 1856, John Wesley Hale was three years of age at the time the family returned to Schuyler County, and here he received his schooling in Buena Vista Township. In March of 1880 he married Miss Vina F. Warrington, a daughter of Isaac M. Warrington, and a native of Rushville, Ill., born in June, 1858. They are the parents of seven children: Maude, Jessie, Bertha, Dwight, Ruth, Homer and Bessie, all of whom are at home. Politically a Democrat, Mr. Hale has filled various offices with credit to himself and satisfaction to all concerned. In 1906 he was the Democratic nominee for Supervisor for Camden Township and was elected by a gratifying majority. In addition, for some years he filled the office of County Central Committeeman from his township. With his wife he holds membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, while fraternally he belongs to Camden Lodge No. 48, A. F. & A. M. The success with which he has met proves him to be a man of large powers of mind, rugged determination of character and judgment in his business transactions. All in all, he furnishes an illustration of the type of progressive farmer and loyal citizen whose presence in the county and commonwealth is of the highest importance to the permanent prosperity of the nation.

HAMMOND, Charles Henry.—Occupying a leading position among the business men of Rushville is the gentleman whose name stands at the head of this article and whose birth occurred October 26, 1868, in the county where he now resides. The genealogy of the family is traced back several generations in America, the great-grandparents of the subject of this sketch being Henry and Mary (Russell) Hammond, natives of Pennsylvania. The grandparents, Jacob and Elizabeth (Uhl) Hammond, were born respectively in Maryland and Pennsylvania, and the father, Jacob, Jr., was a native of Knox County, Ohio. The last-named, who retired from business in 1903, and who is represented elsewhere in this work, married Sarah Margaret Lawler, who was born in Schuyler County, Ill., being a daughter of George Edward and Caroline (Hymer) Lawler, born respectively in Virginia and North Carolina. The grandparents of Sarah Margaret Lawler were Alexander Lawler, of Virginian birth, and Margaret Buckner (White) Lawler, also born in the Old Dominion.

The education of Charles Henry Hammond was received in Rushville, Ill., and in Kirksville, Mo. From the spring of 1883 to the fall of 1893 he was Assistant Postmaster, first with his father, who was Postmaster from 1882 to 1886, then with Postmaster Albert H. Seeley, 1886 to 1890, and then with Postmaster Hutton until the fall of 1893, when he and his father, Jacob Hammond, embarked in the furniture and undertaking business as successors to Harvey Brothers on the south side of the square. In September of 1900 he entered the American School of Osteopathy at Kirksville, Mo., where he received an education in that profession under its founder, Dr. A. T. Still. After graduating in June of 1902 he returned to Rushville and in May of the following year sold the furniture and undertaking business to H. W. Graff, after which he devoted himself to the practice of osteopathy for some years. In February, 1906, he purchased his former business, which he now conducts under the firm title of Charles H. Hammond. The business was founded by E. H. O. Seeley in January of 1831 and is one of the oldest of its kind in this section of Illinois. For the undertaking business he is well qualified by a course of study in Clark's School of Embalming, Chicago, and his knowledge of osteopathy, with its careful training in anatomy, further qualifies him for efficient work as an undertaker.

Although not connected with any denomination Mr. Hammond is interested in religious work and attends services at the Methodist Episcopal Church. Politically he has been a staunch supporter of Republican principles ever since attaining his majority. In 1894 he was made a Master Mason and is a member of Rushville Lodge No. 9, A. F. & A. M. In 1905 he became identified with Rushville Chapter No. 184, R. A. M., in the following year was initiated into Rushville Commandery K. T., No. 56, of which in June 1908, he was chosen Eminent Commander. In 1902 became associated with Moila Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine at St. Joseph, Mo. His fraternal relations further include membership in Kirksville Lodge No. 464, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, at Kirksville. At Rushville, October 12, 1892, he was united in marriage with Miss Harriet G. McCreery, who was born near that city May 22, 1871. Her father and her grandparents on both sides came from the North of Ireland. Two daughters bless their union, namely: Geneva Beatrice, born September 13, 1894; and Virginia McCreery, June 12, 1900, both of whom are receiving the advantages offered by the excellent schools of their home city.

HAMMOND, Captain Harold, of the Twenty-third Regiment, United States Infantry, whose military record is surpassed by that of few, if any, of the younger officers of the regular army, was born in Rushville, Schuyler County, Ill., October 21, 1874, a son of Jacob and Sarah Margaret (Lawler) Hammond, the former a native of Knox County, Ohio, where he was born November 28th, 1834. The maternal grandfather and the great grandfather on the paternal side fought under Washington during the Revolutionary War. The occupation of the father while in active life was that of a merchant, and he is now living in retirement.

The boyhood of the subject of this sketch was occupied with school studies, and otherwise passed in the recreations and diversions common to youth of vigorous physical development, such as skating, swimming, rowing, etc. He attended the Rushville High School and was afterwards a student in the Illinois College at Jacksonville. In 1893, and for a portion of 1894, he acted in the capacity of Assistant Postmaster at Rushville. In the summer of 1894, he entered the United States Military Academy at West Point, from which he was graduated in April, 1898, being assigned to Gen. Shafter's army to Cuba in 1898, saw active service at Santiago, was stationed at Madison Barracks, N. Y., in October of the last named year, and was promoted to First Lieutenant in the winter following. In April, 1899, his regiment was sent to the Philippines, where he took part in many engagements, being in command of his company. He commanded a company of the Ninth Regiment when ordered with the relief army to China in July, 1900, participating in all of the fighting on the way to Peking, and in the capture of that city, which resulted in the relief of the foreign legations. From China, he was sent to the Island of Samar in the spring of 1901, returning to the United States in June, 1902. From August, 1902, until June, 1906, he was instructor in drawing in the United States Military Academy at West Point, having been promoted in October, of the former year, to a captaincy, and transferred to the Twenty-third Regiment, United States Infantry. His promotion as Captain was recommended by Gen. Lawton, for "bravery and good judgment in handling his company" in the Zapote River fight in the Island of Luzon, in June, 1901. At the Jamestown Exposition, at Norfolk, Va., in the summer of 1907, he was in charge of the Army and Navy Club, and in December of the same year, was detailed for duty as Paymaster, being stationed at Washington, D. C. He is a member of several military orders, among them being the Order of the Dragon.

On July 9, 1902, at Des Moines, Iowa, Capt. Hammond was united in marriage with Mary Pierce, a native of that State, and a niece of the late Hon. Edwin H. Conger, United States Minister to China, and afterwards to Mexico, of whose family she was a member for several years. Capt. Hammond first met Miss Pierce during the Boxer insurrection in China, while she was residing at the American Legation, presided over by her uncle, Mr. Conger, and besieged by hosts of murderous fanatics which the allied forces were dispatched by their respective governments from various points in the Orient to subdue. Mrs. Hammond passed through all the woful experience of the Boxer siege, until saved from a terrible death by the timely arrival of the long and anxiously awaited troops of the foreign powers.

Capt. Hammond is the author of numerous articles published in standard magazines, and for three years has contributed a serial to "St. Nicholas," entitled "Pinky Perkins." The "Century Company" has also issued two volumes of his sketches.

HAMMOND, Henry G.—At the age of seventy-eight years Henry G. Hammond finds himself an active factor in the management of his well appointed farm in Rushville Township, upon which he settled in 1883, and where he is surrounded by innumerable evidences of his industry, progress and refinement. As a boy, Mr. Hammond shared in the labor of a farm in Knox County, Ohio, where he was born in 1828, and upon which his parents, Jacob and Elizabeth (Uhl) Hammond, had settled at an early day. The father was a native of Maryland, and born in 1801, and the mother born in Pennsylvania in 1800.

During the first year of the Civil War Mr. Hammond left Ohio and came to Rushville Township, occupying another farm until he settled on his present one in 1883. He has been twice married, his first wife having been Marilla Walker, and his present wife, Maud Campbell, both natives of Ohio. The only daughter in the family, Lena E., is the wife of Ross Briggs, a farmer of Woodstock Township. Aside from the formality of casting his vote, Mr. Hammond has never been actively interested in politics. In years past he was a constant attendant at the Methodist Episcopal Church, and contributed generously towards its support, and now, the weather permitting, he is seen in his pew, and takes a lively interest in music and sermon. Mr. Hammond is of genial and optimistic disposition, and this, taken in connection with the physical exercise, temperate habits, and wholesome diversions which have filled his life, tend to the assurance that many years more of usefulness and prosperity are in store for him.

HAMMOND, Jacob.—Previous to his permanent location in Rushville, Ill., in 1873, Lieutenant Jacob Hammond had rounded out his thirty-nine years with farming, soldiering and school-teaching, and had developed a strength of character and resourcefulness which made him a valuable and much needed citizen. The forty-five intervening years have witnessed an increase in the variety and extent of his capacity for usefulness, and he has unceasingly contributed to the welfare of the city as educator, office-holder, merchant, fraternalist and church-worker. Of late years little has happened in the community of vital interest that directly or indirectly has not been influenced by his opinion.

Jacob Hammond was born in Knox County, Ohio, in November, 1834, and on both sides of his family is of German descent. His father, Jacob Hammond, came of a family which early settled in the eastern part of Pennsylvania, later moving to the western part of that State, whence Jacob in early life journeyed to Knox County, Ohio, and there purchased land during the summer of 1824. The family of Elizabeth Uhl, his wife, also was identified with the pioneer history of Pennsylvania, and Mrs. Hammond's grandfather followed the martial fortunes of Washington during the Revolutionary War. From this remote sire probably is inherited the distinctly military tendencies of certain of his present day descendants. While, in the Fatherland, "Hamond" was the common spelling of the family name, which since has been changed to Hammond. Jacob Hammond, Sr., followed farming for many years of his life, but he had strong religious convictions, and not only was ordained to the Methodist Episcopal ministry, but preached for many years without pay, and solely for the good of his fellow men. He was known as one of the most genial and lovable of men, and his memory is cherished by a host of people to whom he pointed out the wise and happy ways of life. He had eight brothers and sisters, and with the exception of two brothers who died in Iowa, all spent the greater part of their lives in Ohio. Mr. Hammond cultivated a fine farm in Knox County, Ohio, and upon it was platted the now thriving town of Millwood. Here his death occurred at the age of eighty-seven years, his wife attaining to seventy years.

Jacob Hammond, Jr., was surrounded by fine and Christian early influences, and was encouraged to a studious and practically useful existence. In the district schools and through his home application, he acquired an excellent education, and beginning with 1858 taught two terms of six months each in his home district. He also taught one term in Medina County, Ohio, during the winter of 1859-60, and from this peaceful occupation and that of farming, turned in October, 1861, to test the fortunes of war. Enlisting in Company A, Sixty-fifth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, for three years, he was mustered in as Second Lieutenant, having helped to organize the company. The regiment became a part of the Sherman Brigade, which John Sherman, then a member of the United States Senate, assisted to organize, and showed deep interest in the company. From December, 1861, Mr. Hammond served in Kentucky and Tennessee, participated in the battles of Shiloh and Pittsburg Landing, at the latter battle being on the brigade staff as ordnance officer under General Harker, who was killed at the battle of Kennesaw Mountain. Owing to failing health he was advised to resign during the second year of his service, and in June, 1862, was honorably discharged, when he returned to his former home in Ohio.

In the fall of 1862, Mr. Hammond went to Marengo County, Iowa, to visit a brother, and during that winter taught a district school for one term. In April, 1863, he came to Rushville, and then visited another brother living in the southern part of Schuyler County. June 20, 1865, he was united in marriage to Sarah M. Lawler, daughter of George E. Lawler, mention of whom may be found elsewhere in this work. The young people settled on a farm in Schuyler County, made that their home until 1871, and in 1873 located permanently in Rushville, where Mr. Hammond taught school until appointed Postmaster of the town in 1882. He continued to administer satisfactorily the local affairs of Uncle Sam until 1886, and in that year engaged in the grocery business until disposing of the same in 1893. He then established a furniture and undertaking business with his son, Charles H., in which he since has engaged, controlling a large patronage, and sustaining a reputation as one of the foremost merchants of the community.

Mr. Hammond's devotion to the Republican party has brought him many honors besides the Postmastership. He was elected Justice of the Peace in 1878, holding the same for five years, was for nine years member of the School Board, and for one year City Treasurer. His services have been characterized by strict integrity and staunch devotion to the public welfare, to the end that he has received the support and approbation of even his political enemies. In 1858 he became a member of the Masonic fraternity in Ohio, and is also one of the charter members of the Grand Army of the Republic. With his wife he is an active and helpful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to the support of which he is a liberal contributor. No man in Rushville has led a cleaner, more upright life than Mr. Hammond, and his contribution to its moral, educational and commercial stability is an enviable and lasting one.

Mr. and Mrs. Hammond are the parents of two sons, Charles H. and Harold. The Hammond boys have been given the best of educational and general advantages, and their lives have rounded out to wide and interesting proportions. The martial strain in the family is well sustained by Harold Hammond, a graduate of West Point, class of 1898, who was born in Rushville October 21, 1874. Mr. Hammond enlisted in the Ninth United States Infantry during the Spanish-American War, serving first in Cuba, and in the spring of 1899 going to the Philippine Islands, where he was advanced to the position of First Lieutenant. Subsequently the Ninth was sent to China, and Lieutenant Hammond was one of the first to aid in the rescue of the American legation at Peking. After this heroic adventure, and partially because of it, he soon after won the heart and hand of Miss Mary Pierce, a niece of United States Minister to China, Conger, and the marriage was solemnized in Des Moines, Iowa, in 1902. Upon his return to this country Lieutenant Hammond was commissioned Captain, and for four years was an instructor in a military school. He is an expert tactician, well grounded in all that engages the attention of military men, and his family and friends are justly proud of the honors and distinctions which have rewarded his efforts.

HARDING, William M.—Not only is the Kentucky family of Harding one of the earliest, as it is one of the most numerous of any connected with the upbuilding of the Bourbon State, but from its strong and dependable stock have sprung hundreds of men and women who have taken a distinctive and even conspicuous part in the development of many and widely separated communities. For the most part agriculturists, their ambitions frequently have led them into the unfrequented parts of the country, and indeed the pioneering instinct has been a chief, if not a leading, family characteristic. Schuyler County has profited richly by this courageous and sturdy element, and in the person of William McKee Harding, a farmer of Section 11, Buena Vista Township, the qualities most prized and cultivated by the Kentucky progenitors are in no sense abated.

The infant wail of William M. Harding resounded against the walls of a rough log cabin near Cameron, Warren County, where he was born on March 19, 1839. His parents were Aaron and Nancy (McKee) Harding, and his paternal grandfather was John Harding, a native of Kentucky. (The McKee family record may be found elsewhere in this volume.) John Harding was a man of strong character, who loved danger and adventure, and whose nomadic spirit craved the excitement and opportunities of the frontier. When our subject's father was but a boy he went with his father and others of his family to the present site of Indianapolis, Ind.; but when that region began to take on a semblance of civilization, he moved on again, this time to Hancock County, Ill., where he took up government land on Bear Creek. The Indians at that time were on the war path, game abounded, and danger lurked on every hand. John Harding took a hand in eliminating these conditions, but the very tameness he helped to bring about had no charm for him, and in 1853, he moved to the Territory of Oregon, with his daughter and son-in-law, his wife then being deceased. Here his death occurred at the age of seventy-five years.

Born in 1803, Aaron Harding led a life scarcely less adventurous than that of his father. He inherited the Harding grit and courage, and the time and place in which he lived bore a heavy strain upon these qualities. Settling on government land in Buena Vista Township, he laid aside his implements of peace in 1832 to enlist in the conflict with the Sac and Fox Indians, known as the Black Hawk War, serving as a private in the company in the same regiment in which Abraham Lincoln was captain of a company. When peace was restored Mr. Harding moved to Warren County, Ill., where he improved a farm until 1835, in that year returning to Schuyler County, where he died October 9, 1845. In Schuyler County he improved a farm, and planted an orchard, the country then being in a primitive state. One day he killed three deer, which he pursued on horseback, striking them on the head with a poking pole after they had been run down by hounds. His wife, who was born in Crawford County, Ill., in 1810, came to Schuyler County in 1826 at the age of sixteen years. She nobly shared the dangers and trials of her husband, at his death being left with a family of eight children, all of whom attained years of maturity, and five of whom were married. Of these, but two survive, William M. and Cassie, the latter the widow of Newton Atkinson, of Industry Township, McDonough County. Mrs. Aaron Harding died on January 25, 1892, at the age of eighty-one years.

A heavy weight of responsibility rested upon the youth of William McKee Harding, as he was only six years old when his father died, and the resources of the family were at very low ebb. His attendance at the subscription school of the neighborhood was at best irregular, but he was able to make good use of his time, and he acquired an average education. He remembers putting in much of his time grubbing hazel and other bushes. Later as there were no longer Indians or game to pursue, his love of adventure found vent in a trip to Texas, where he bought a herd of cattle and drove them across the plains to the State of Kansas. The sale of this herd was so successful that during the following year (1871) he made another journey to the South and bought a much larger herd, consisting of 400 head. These he fed and shipped to St. Louis, and in 1873 returned to Schuyler County just in time to go under with the panic of that year. Nothing daunted, he resumed grubbing and farming, and in September, 1875, married Louise Schultz, with whom he settled on Section 1, Buena Vista Township. Mrs. Harding was a native of Missouri, in which State her mother died, her father's death occurring at Baders, Schuyler County. To Mr. and Mrs. Harding were born two children, of whom John A. died at the age of two and a half years, while Carrie, who was born in December, 1876, is the wife of William Kirkham, in charge of the old Harding homestead. Mr. and Mrs. Kirkham have three children: Francis Harding, born December 11, 1901; Lyle Raymond, born December 24, 1903; and Robert H., born April 19, 1905. The passing of Mrs. William (McKee) Harding, May 3, 1880, left a void in the hearts of her husband and daughter and of many friends. She was a gentle, lovable woman, and an earnest member of the Christian Church.

The rise from comparative poverty of Mr. Harding furnishes an encouraging lesson to those who struggle with adverse circumstances. He settled on his present farm in 1851, finding it all crude and uncultivated, and even without a log cabin in which the family might have temporary shelter. He earned the money to pay for his first small cabin, and this in turn was succeeded by another house which eventually gave place to the present substantial structure in which Mr. Harding lives with his daughter and her family. All of the buildings which now house the stock, products and machinery were erected by Mr. Harding, and few farms in the township are better supplied with all that tends to progressive and successful farming. More than half a century ago he set out an orchard which attained maturity, bore fruit in season, and passed into the gnarled and useless period of its existence. This was succeeded by the orchard which now gives shade and food to the homestead dwellers. To his first hundred acres he has added until he now owns 200 acres, 160 of which are in Buena Vista, and the remainder in Littleton Township. Mr. Harding has been a careful and painstaking farmer, living always within his income, and studying scientifically the diverse possibilities of his land. The generous and kindly impulse is noticeable in all his walks of life, and in his relations with the Christian Church, of which he is a devout and active member. Politically he is identified with the Republican party, which he has aided with a conscientious vote if not with official service. He is honored as a conservative and capable citizen who reflects credit upon the family from which he springs and the community whose best agricultural and general interests he represents.

HARRISON, Benjamin Chadsey, for many years one of the leading farmers in Brooklyn Township, Schuyler County, Ill., a man of high character and upright life, respected by all, and recognized as one of the most useful citizens of his community, was born in Brooklyn Township, February 9, 1846, a son of Benjamin and Mary (Riggs) Harrison, natives of Indiana and Kentucky respectively. The paternal grandfather was one of the early settlers of Brooklyn Township, Schuyler County, and Sheldon Riggs, the grandfather on the maternal side, spent a portion of his early life on the ocean as a sailor, finally becoming one of the pioneer residents of the same township, where he entered up a tract of government land thickly covered with timber. Some time previous to the Civil War he went to Texas, and remained in that State until the conflict was over, returning then to Brooklyn Township, where he spent the remainder of his days, dying about the year 1866. The death of Grandfather Harrison occurred in Brooklyn Township in 1840. Benjamin Harrison, father of Benjamin C., was the owner of some land in the locality of the latter's present home. He went to California in 1848, living there for twenty years. On his return to Illinois, he made a visit to Brooklyn Township, and then located in Henry County, Mo., where he departed this life, his wife having passed away on the home place in 1867. Their family consisted of three sons, the two others being John and William Henry, both deceased. The mother, having been judicially separated from the father, was married to William Justus, by whom she had a daughter, who died when quite young. In early youth, Benjamin C. Harrison attended the district schools in his vicinity, and grew to manhood inured to farm life. He has always lived on the homestead, which became his by inheritance. It consists of 140 acres, located in Section 36, Brooklyn Township, and in addition to this he has bought 110 acres in Sections 1 and 12, Camden Township, the purchase including about fifty acres of timber land. Besides general farming, he is engaged in raising horses, cattle and hogs, and has met with success in all his operations.

On December 15, 1870, Mr. Harrison was united in marriage with Emma Peterson, who was born in Camden Township, Schuyler County, April 4, 1853. Mrs. Harrison, a woman of most excellent traits of character, is a daughter of Samuel and Almira (Davis) Peterson, natives of Indiana, her grandparents being John and Edith (Clifton) Peterson, and Ward and Martha (Titter) Davis. Four children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Harrison, as follows: Mary, born September 22, 1872, who became the wife of Frank L. White, of Camden Township; Wallace B., born April 7, 1874, who lives in Brooklyn Township; Jessie, born September 29, 1875, who married Fleming Horney, and is a resident of Littleton, Ill.; and Dwight, born June 6, 1881, who follows farming on the home place.

In political action, Mr. Harrison is a supporter of the Republican party. His religious connection, as also that of his wife, is with the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he officiates as trustee and steward. Mr. and Mrs. Harrison are held in warm regard by all their friends, who are many in number.

HARTMAN, George, a well known and prosperous plumbing contractor of Rushville, Ill., and one of the most prominent and influential citizens of that place, was born in Columbus, Ohio, September 17, 1856, a son of Henry and Louise Hartman, natives of Germany and France, respectively. His parents came to the United States in 1851 and proceeding to Ohio, located in the capital city of that State. They were the parents of a family of twelve children.

In boyhood George Hartman attended the public schools of Columbus, and at the age of 15 years, applied himself to the task of learning the trade of a tinner and plumber. In this occupation he became very efficient, and has followed the business of tinning and plumbing ever since, with the best of success. From Columbus he moved to Toledo, O., where he remained three years. In 1881 he became a resident of Rushville, Ill., and in a comparatively short period built up a very profitable patronage, taking a position at the head of his trade, and ranking as one of the leading citizens of the community. He secured the contract for the tin, iron and slate work on the new court house in Rushville, and also that on the county jail. Besides his work in these lines, he has established a business in pumps and well-digging, which has assumed considerable proportion. The apparatus used in his well-boring operations is of his own invention, and not only greatly facilitates the process, but has given him no little prestige of mechanical ingenuity.

On February 3, 1881, Mr. Hartman was united in marriage with Carrie Pelton, who was born in Bowling Green, Ohio, where in girlhood she enjoyed the advantages of a good common school education. Three interesting children were the result of this union, namely: May, Louise and Lillian.

In politics Mr. Hartman is a staunch adherent of the Democratic party, and is prominent in its local councils. He was elected Mayor of Rushville in 1899, and gave the city a most creditable and satisfactory administration. Fraternally he is identified with the I. O. O. F., M. W. A. and K. of P. Socially he is very popular and the range of his personal acquaintance includes many warm friends.

HERRON, Thomas W.—Among the most prosperous and worthy representatives of the agricultural element in Schuyler County, Ill., and one who is respected by all for his good qualities, is the well known farmer of Bainbridge Township whose name stands at the head of this personal record. Mr. Herron was born on the "Darnell farm," in Rushville Township, Schuyler County, Ill., February 29, 1860, a son of David and Mary (Hull) Herron. David Herron was born in County Down, Ireland, June 27, 1829, and came to the United States about the year 1850, locating in Mahoning County, Ohio, where he was married to Mary Hull in 1857. Not long after his arrival in this country he had made a trip to Schuyler County, Ill., returning in a short time to Ohio, and subsequently coming back to his permanent home in Illinois. Before leaving his native land he had learned the trade of a weaver, but abandoned that occupation on locating in Ohio. After making his home in Schuyler County, he worked for some time by the day and month, and then followed farming on rented land until 1865. In that year, he bought 160 acres in Section 13, Bainbridge Township. The tract had been heavily timbered, and the only dwelling on it was a log cabin, in which he and his wife settled down to house-keeping. He applied himself to the task of grubbing the stumps and clearing the ground, and in course of time made many substantial and attractive improvements on his property. He died May 6, 1904, at that time being the owner of 440 acres of land, 240 of which consisted of the home farm, the other 200 being located in Frederick Township. His widow is still living on the homestead place at the age of sixty-six years, in the enjoyment of unimpaired health and of the sincere respect and cordial regard of many friends. He and his wife became the parents of six children, as follows: Martha J., who died at the age of forty-one years; Thomas W.; Mary A. and Robert, who died when four and two years old, respectively; Blanche, wife of John R. Strong, a farmer of Frederick Township, and Lulu E., who married Grover Dodds, a farmer on Section 13, Bainbridge Township.

Thomas W. Herron was reared on the paternal farm, receiving his education in the district schools of that vicinity. He worked on the home place until the time of his marriage, at the age of thirty-two years. Soon after that event he took charge of the 240 acres comprising the homestead, continuing thus until 1895, when he bought eighty acres, on which he has since lived. At the time he took possession of this land, it contained no dwelling place except an old log cabin. He built a fine residence of eight rooms, and put up outbuildings, and substantial and convenient barns for the care of his stock. He now owns 160 acres of land under a good state of cultivation, and is looked upon as one of the enterprising and progressive farmers in his township.

The marriage of Mr. Herron took place March 24, 1892, on which date he was wedded to Sarah J. Dodds, who was born in Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County, Ill., February 9, 1869, and is a daughter of Samuel and Margarette (Wilson) Dodds, natives of County Down, Ireland. (Further particulars in regard to the Dodds family may be found in a biographical record of Thomas Dodds, which appears on another page of this volume.) Mr. and Mrs. Herron have one child, Lottie Myrtle, born August 23, 1894. Mrs. Herron, a woman of many amiable traits of character, is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In politics, Mr. Herron is identified with the Democratic party, although taking no active part in political contests and entertaining no desire for public office.

HIGGINS, Henry.—Few residents of Brooklyn Township are so closely in touch with the progress made in Schuyler County during the past half century as Henry Higgins, who was born in Brooklyn Township in the early 'forties, and has known no other home. He is a son of Daniel and Sarah (Brewer) Higgins, natives of Ohio and Morgan County, Pa., respectively. His paternal grandfather, Higgins, died in Ohio, while the maternal grandfather, Brewer, passed away in Pennsylvania. As early as 1838 Daniel Higgins came as a pioneer to Schuyler County, Ill., and on the farm which he had purchased in Brooklyn Township, his earthly life came to a close about 1892, having reached the venerable age of ninety years. His wife had died in 1880. When Daniel Higgins located in this Township it was a vast wilderness, presenting little of encouragement to clear the land and prepare it for planting. However, he lacked none of the qualities necessary in the make-up of the true pioneer, and was undismayed by the formidable task which lay before him. Probably one of the most trying experiences during the early days was what was known as the high water of 1844. In common with all the other farmers, Mr. Higgins lost his entire crop, the only one who had anything to show for his season's work being William Brickman, who succeeded in saving his corn.

The eldest child born to Daniel and Sarah Higgins was Julia A., who became the wife of John Fowler, but both are now deceased; the next child in order of birth, John W., also is deceased; Jackson is a resident of Brooklyn Township; Christopher died in Reno, Nev.; and James is a farmer of Brooklyn Township. Henry was born on his father's farm in Brooklyn Township, May 17, 1842, and here his entire life has been passed. He clearly recalls the experiences of his boyhood while endeavoring to glean an education in the primitive schools at Center Ridge, which was distantly located, and which he attended with as much regularity as the home duties would permit. The building in which the children gathered to receive their meager instruction was a rude log structure, and its only furniture consisted of slab seats and desks. Here the children conned their lessons and ate their lunches, which consisted principally of a corn cake baked in the old Dutch oven of early days. Mr. Higgins well remembers the time during his boyhood when this primitive fireplace was supplanted by the more modern cook stove, the one which his father purchased being the first one to make its appearance on Center Ridge. The day after its purchase neighbors from far and near came to see the wonderful invention. The mother used the stove continuously until the marriage of her son Henry, when she gave it to him and for five years thereafter it was in constant service.

The marriage of Henry Higgins occurred October 9, 1873, uniting him with Sarah Gossage, who was born and reared in Brooklyn Township. Mrs. Higgins is a daughter of Thomas and Mary Jane (Edmonson) Gossage, the former still living and making his home with his children. Mrs. Gossage died November 2, 1905. After his marriage Mr. Higgins continued to make his home on the old home farm until 1885, when he purchased 151 acres of land on Section 6, Brooklyn Township, and in the log cabin which he erected in a clearing, the family made their home for five years. In 1890 he moved the cabin back and in its place erected the present commodious residence now occupied by the family. In keeping with this he has also built excellent farm buildings, and, taken as a whole, it would be hard to find a more up-to-date farm equipment than that owned by Mr. Higgins.

Mr. and Mrs. Higgins have become the parents of two children, Charles and Ira E. Charles was born January 18, 1875, married Miss Chickwood, by whom he has one child, Artie Ray, and is now established as a farmer in Brooklyn Township; Ira was born April 6, 1883, is a resident of Schuyler County, and is employed in carrying the mail from Birmingham. He married Inez Manlove, who was born in Schuyler County, the daughter of Jacob Manlove, and two children have been born to them. Both Mr. and Mrs. Higgins are ardent members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and politically Mr. Higgins is a Democrat.

At the age of nineteen years Henry Higgins was converted to Christianity through the preaching of a Methodist minister, who in 1861 held a series of revival services in the old Center Ridge school house. In January of that year forty were converted, including Mr. Higgins. On May 30 following he was taken ill and until June 9 the doctor remained by his bedside constantly. On the day last mentioned about three o'clock in the afternoon, while Mr. Higgins was entirely alone, he had a vision in which he saw a man standing in the room who introduced himself to the sick boy as his Heavenly Father. In his hands he carried a large book, which he gave to the boy saying "Be thou healed, be thou whole." Immediately afterward the patient turned himself in bed, the first time he had done this unassisted since his sickness began. As he took the open book in his hands he read aloud from the right hand page the names of Christian friends, and on the left hand page he saw the names of friends that were not professing Christians. He also saw his brother Christopher standing between him and the other friends, and thereafter six children with angels came into the room. At the request of his friends Mr. Higgins joined in the song with the angels and children, and those who were gathered in the room said they never had heard a clearer or sweeter voice. After the song was finished he thought he was in heaven and there conversed with Job and the Heavenly Father, the latter saying to him that he was going to send him (Mr. Higgins) back to earth with a message, which he was to deliver just two weeks from that day, June 9, to those friends whose names had appeared in the left hand page of the book. He then began to sink and his father and friends who were watching thought he was dying. He rallied, however, and just two weeks from that day, he went to Center Ridge and delivered the message to those of his friends still unconverted. The news of his wonderful healing caused widespread comment and was published in the papers of Schuyler County.

HILLYER, Henry.—No retired citizen of Huntsville, Schuyler County, has contributed more to the making of his architectural surroundings than has Henry Hillyer. In this industrious and capable builder and contractor of other days, Schuyler County recognizes a scion of one of its very early and prominent families, one who has left the impress of his character and work upon its progress and development for sixty-eight years, and who invariably has stood for the best commercial, industrial, political, religious and social conditions. Mr. Hillyer was born in the City of New York, August 15, 1831, and in that same city were born four daughters out of the fourteen children of William and Sarah (Earwicker) Hillyer, natives of Portsmouth, England, and who came to America with two of their children about 1819. In Norfolk, Va., where the family lived for a time after arriving in America, two other children were born, and in Baltimore, which was their home for a time, a daughter was born. In Cincinnati, whither they moved after several years in New York, a girl was added to the family, and in the same city the mother died, the father surviving her until 1858. Of this large family three members now are living, Isaac M. and Edward N., both of Cincinnati, and Henry, of Huntsville, Ill.

William Hillyer and his son, James, came to Schuyler County in 1839, the father later returning to the east, while James went west in the early 'fifties to seek his fortune in the mines, and as far as is known is still a resident of California. Henry Hillyer was educated in the public schools of Ohio, and in 1849 went to Chandlerville, Cass County, Ill., where he followed the carpenter trade until 1855. He then came to Schuyler County and took the contract for a large two-story frame building for Lewis F. King, thereafter continuing his trade of carpenter and builder with growing success. He erected many barns and dwellings in this part of the county, and many still are standing in excellent condition, a tribute to his thoroughness and conscientious workmanship. At times he was a large employer of labor, and he had the gift of securing from his employes the best service of which they were capable.

January 24, 1861, Mr. Hillyer was united in marriage to Henrietta Sanford, who was born in New York, April 20, 1840, a daughter of Sylvester and Maria (Redfield) Sanford, arrivals in Huntsville Township in 1854. For many years Mr. Sanford followed farming, then retired and built a beautiful home in Huntsville village, where his death occurred in 1880, and that of his wife in 1895. Of the five children of this couple three are still living: Henrietta, widow of James Seeley, of Rushville; George Sanford of Hampton, Iowa; and the wife of Mr. Hillyer. Mr. and Mrs. Hillyer are the parents of four children: Herbert, born October 1, 1861, a painter and decorator of Beardstown, Ill.; Florence, wife of J. V. Smith, an oculist of Bloomington, Ill., and parents of one son, Bernard; Minnie, wife of Alexander Alters, of Huntsville, who has four children: Edith, Russell, Ralph and Carroll; and Dr. Warren E. Hillyer, of Huntsville, who has a son, Ernest, and who is represented elsewhere in this work.

Mr. Hillyer's is the only family left of those established in Huntsville in 1861. He has been an integral part of the community, and his labor has netted him a comfortable competence. For many years he has been a staunch promoter of the Presbyterian Church, and socially is connected with the local lodge of Masons. He began to handle the tools of the carpenter when fourteen years old, and has always sought to make his work of value to his fellow men. No man in the township is held in higher esteem, nor has anyone a larger number of devoted and appreciative friends.

HILLYER, Warren E., M. D.—A career deeply in tune with the humanities, and of inestimable value to the community of Huntsville, is that of Dr. Warren E. Hillyer, a young physician and surgeon of recognized skill and ability, and a native son of the town in which are centered his professional labors. Born July 22, 1872, Dr. Hillyer is a son of Henry Hillyer, and his preliminary education was acquired in the district school, and completed in the local high school in the class of 1893. Soon after leaving his school days behind him, the youth entered the office of Dr. Smith, of Mt. Sterling, and for eighteen months had a varied experience in study and supplementary practice. In 1895 he entered the Keokuk Medical School, at Keokuk, Iowa, graduating therefrom in the three years' course in March, 1898.

In Fowler, Adams County, Ill., Dr. Hillyer made his professional beginning, remaining there and succeeding beyond his largest expectations until returning to his native town of Huntsville, January 1, 1899. In the meantime he has worked up a large and paying practice, has demonstrated a high degree of efficiency, and has been especially successful in the diagnosis and treatment of complicated and seemingly hopeless cases. He has a large and well equipped office, supplied with electrical and other expensive apparatus, and he avails himself of journals, conventions and post-graduate work to increase his efficiency and capacity for usefulness. A pleasing personality is not the least of his professional, as well as social assets, and an impression of sincerity invariably is backed by the most trustworthy and dependable service.

The marriage of Dr. Hillyer and Orpha Caine was solemnized April 23, 1899, in Adams County, Ill., the home of the bride, Mrs. Hillyer being a daughter of Philip Caine, a prominent and wealthy citizen of that county. Dr. Hillyer and his wife have one son, Ernest, born September 12, 1901. The doctor affiliates with the Presbyterian Church, and fraternally is connected with the Masons, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Home Fraternal League. In politics he is a Democrat.

HODGE, William Hamilton.—The city of Rushville, has produced many men of sterling character, superior intelligence and progressive spirit, whose lives have contributed largely to the increase of its prosperity and reflected signal credit upon the place of their birth. Among these, William H. Hodge, who spent a long and honored life in that locality, always conspicuously identified with its best interests, is second to none. Mr. Hodge was born in Rushville, Ill., January 12, 1834. His father, John Hodge, who was a carpenter by trade, was born in the vicinity of Mt. Sterling, Ky., March 26, 1800. Louisa (McClure) Hodge, his mother, was born in the same neighborhood, March 24, 1814. John Hodge moved from his native State to Illinois in 1831, establishing his home in Rushville. He was a conspicuous factor in the early activities of the place, and constructed the running gear of the well-known carding mill which was then put in operation. He departed this life in 1869, his wife dying the same year. They had seven children, of whom the venerable gentleman to whom this record pertains is the sole survivor.

Four died in infancy; of the two others deceased, who reached maturity, John passed away at the age of twenty-one, and Alice married a grandson of the Confederate General Price and left one child.

William H. Hodge passed his youthful years in the parental home, and made diligent use of the opportunities afforded by the common schools of Rushville. After finishing his studies he fitted himself for the work of telegraph operator, and continued in that occupation several years. Subsequently he became a wool-carder, and was thus engaged until 1869, from which period his time was variously occupied until 1887.

On October 25, 1865, Mr. Hodge was united in marriage, in Oakland Township, Schuyler County, with Matilda T. Clupper, who was born in Pennsylvania, a daughter of Jacob and Mary Clupper, natives of that State. On coming to Illinois, they first located in Fulton County. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Hodge resulted in seven children, five of whom are living, namely: John W., a resident of Mosier, Ore., who married Effie Jack, and is the father of one daughter and three sons; Etta E., wife of J. S. McKinzie, their children being Hazel and James Hodge; Lewis C., who lives in Mosier, Ore., and Ora H. and Olie M., twins, of whom the latter is at home.

HOOD, James E., a leading citizen of Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County, Ill., whose farming operations, conducted on a very extensive scale, have made him favorably known throughout the county, was born in Cass County, Ill., May 15, 1855. Mr. Hood is a son of James and Almida Hood, natives of Beardstown, Ill. (Further details in regard to the life of the senior James Hood, and particulars concerning his family, may be found in a narrative of the career of W. C. Hood, appearing in this connection.) The birth of James E. Hood occurred on the farm of his father, a little southeast of Beardstown, Ill., and he helped the latter in the work of the place until he was fifteen years old, meanwhile attending the district schools of the neighborhood. Then he was employed in the blacksmith shop with his father for the next three years, and afterwards followed farming several years in Cass County. In 1883, he bought 220 acres of bottom land in Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County, and in the spring of the ensuing year, took possession of the new place, moving with his wife into a small log cabin that he had made ready for occupancy, and soon building a two-room frame dwelling. The land was covered with stumps and brush, and he at once applied himself to the task of grubbing and blasting, and clearing the brush away. The first 220 acres thus prepared for tilling now constitute one of the most fertile and productive pieces of land in Central Illinois. To the original purchase he has added 150 acres, and the entire property is in a high state of cultivation. All the fences and other improvements on this extensive farm are the result of Mr. Hood's unrelenting toil, his preliminary work largely consisting in removing a great mass of elderberry and ash sprouts. In 1907, he had 115 acres of wheat and 90 acres of corn on the ground formerly covered with thick brush and timber. The farm is well stocked, the accommodations for the shelter and care of his stock are substantial and convenient, as is also the present family residence, and the owner of this superb property is recognized as one of the foremost agriculturists of Schuyler County.

Mr. Hood has been twice married. His first wife was Mary E. Hyde, to whom he was wedded March 3, 1881. She was born in South Dakota, a daughter of John and Mary Hyde. Four children were the issue of this union, namely: James William, Grace Almida, Le Roy and Frank. William is at home; Grace is the wife of Robert E. Lawler, a sketch of whose life appears elsewhere in this volume; Le Roy married Ruth Persinger, and is the father of one child, Vivian A., and Frank is at home. The mother of this family died August 15, 1889. On July 16, 1891, Mr. Hood was united in marriage with Mary N. Lawler, whose birth occurred April 3, 1860. Mrs. Hood is a daughter of John Hugh Lawler, mention of whom is made in the sketch of Robert E. Lawler, above referred to. The offspring of the second marriage is five children, as follows: Jessie A., born April 15, 1892; Mary Ruth born September 19, 1893; Robert E., born March 19, 1895; John Albert, born June 7, 1898; and Harriet Lucile, born May 27, 1900.

On political issues, Mr. Hood has always acted with the Democratic party, although never taking an active interest in party campaigns, and being wholly without ambition for public office. He and his wife, together with the other members of both families, are the objects of cordial regard from a wide circle of friends.

HOOD, William C.—One of the finest homesteads and most sociable households in Schuyler County is that presided over by Mr. and Mrs. William C. Hood, on Section 13, Bainbridge Township. The large farm is thoroughly cultivated and very productive, and improvements are modern and carefully maintained, while the residence itself is convenient, comfortable and cheerful in appearance. The chairs are easy and inviting, good literature is scattered through the house, and the presiding geniuses of the place see to it that their friends are made to have a pleasing consciousness of welcome and good cheer. The result is that the sons and daughters have found their society at home, until they were ready to go out into the world and establish households of their own. If there were more homes founded on this model there would be many happier children, husbands and wives; and if this good, substantial couple had never accomplished more in their lives than this, their success and final reward would still be great.

William C. Hood was born two and a half miles southeast of Beardstown, Cass County, Ill., on the 16th of January, 1853, a son of James and Almeda (Knapp) Hood, the father being a native of Scotland, where his parents passed their lives. James Hood, however, had listened with impatient eagerness to glowing tales told by those who knew of the opportunities afforded a capable young man in America, and in 1842, when he had just passed his majority, located in New York to work at his trade as a blacksmith. Thence he traveled westward to the raw, brisk young city of Chicago, and to its older competitor, St. Louis. Finally deciding that his prospects would be better in a smaller place, he removed to Beardstown, and after following his trade there for a time returned to New York for a wife. Soon after his marriage he again located in Beardstown, where he conducted a blacksmith's shop in connection with his farm until 1902, when he reached the age of seventy-one years. He then retired from active work, and now resides with a son, who is working at his father's trade, and a widowed daughter, all of Beardstown. His wife who became the mother of eight children, died on December 6, 1906, having borne five sons and three daughters, namely: William C.; James Edward, a farmer of Bainbridge Township; Charles, who is a blacksmith at Beardstown; John Henry, who died in infancy; Frank, residing on the home farm in Cass County; Martha G., who died at the age of eighteen; Hattie, the widow of William Garrison, who is keeping house in Beardstown for her father and brother; and Mary, who married David Methland, a confectioner of Salina, Kan.

James Hood, who has now reached the venerable age of eighty-six years has been one of the busiest and most respected citizens of Beardstown; and the high honor still abides with him. When he first located in the county he purchased a farm near the city, upon which he resided, walking to his blacksmith shop in the morning and back to his homestead in the evening. He afterward added to his real estate until the home farm amounted to 200 acres, and he also owned 250 acres in the northern part of Frederick Township. Besides managing his farm and running his blacksmith's shop, Mr. Hood took an active and not unimportant part in political issues. He served in the City Council of Beardstown for a number of terms, and was well in the advance in all public enterprises. As to the secret fraternities, he has long been a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

William C. Hood was reared on the homestead less than three miles southeast of Beardstown, Cass County, Ill., and received his education in the schools of that place. Prior to his marriage in 1877 he removed to Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County, and immediately commenced the improvement of his land in Section 13. He cleared off the heavy timber, brought the land to a state of fine cultivation, and made all the material improvements which now make his homestead so noticeable. Mr. Hood owns not only 307 acres in Bainbridge Township, but 153 in Frederick, making a large and valuable estate of 460 acres of some of the choicest land in Schuyler County. For the realization of this success he by no means claims entire credit, gratefully according the sharer of his joys and sorrows the honor also of winning for himself and family a high and substantial place in the home community.

On December 29, 1877, Mr. Hood was united in marriage to Miss Mary C. Drawve, a native of Beardstown, Cass County, born June 21, 1860, and a daughter of Henry and Mary (Schweer) Drawve. Both her parents were natives of Germany, her mother, who was born in Essen, October 8, 1832, coming to America in 1850. She was married to Henry Drawve in 1858, when they moved to Bainbridge Township and lived upon a farm there until the death of the husband July 7, 1895. The widow died November 1, 1897, leaving the following children: Mrs. W. C. Hood; Mrs. F. B. Crawford, of Rock Island, Ill.; Henry and Herman, farmers of Bainbridge and Frederick Townships, respectively; Mrs. N. Brenner, who married a Frederick Township farmer; Mrs. J. H. Shaw, of Havana, Ill.; and Mrs. Emma L. Hemingway, a resident of Rock Island, Ill.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. William C. Hood have been as follows: Jennie A., born September 9, 1877, who married Joseph P. Quigley, January 29, 1901, and has one child—Raymond W., born November 7, 1902, the family home being in St. Louis, and the husband, being a boot and shoe manufacturer; Harry W., born October 27, 1880, who married Miss Lucinda Loring August 31, 1899, and by her has had two children—Burdett, born September 15, 1900, and Margaret, November 14, 1906—the husband being a farmer of Frederick Township; John H., born October 5, 1882, and died October 30, 1884; Oscar J., born October 16, 1884; Grover, born March 18, 1888; and Floyd J., born June 13, 1892, the last three children living at home. Both Mr. Hood and his wife are members of the Royal Neighbors, with which they are very appropriately identified. Mrs. Hood is a leading factor in the German Lutheran Church, and, while her husband is not associated with any denominational body, he is an earnest and liberal supporter of educational and moral movements. He also belongs to the Beardstown Camp No. 579, Modern Woodmen of America. In politics he is a Democrat, has filled various township offices, and is a man to whom prominence in many fields of endeavor has never come at the sacrifice of his honorable manhood or the public interest.

HORNEY, Cyrus, one of the oldest residents of Schuyler County, Ill., of which he was for many years an enterprising and prosperous farmer and leading citizen, was born in Guilford County, N. C., September 30, 1825, a son of Jonathan and Lydia (Horney) Horney, whose birthplace was in that same locality. The paternal grandparents, Manlove and Lydia (Smith) Horney, as well as the grandparents on the maternal side, Jeffrey and Elizabeth (Pidgeon) Horney, were also natives of North Carolina. In 1829, Jonathan Horney and his wife journeyed by team across the country to Schuyler County, Ill., stopping in Buena Vista Township, where Grandfather Manlove Horney had located some time previously, and thence proceeding to Brooklyn Township, there spending the winter of the "big snow," of 1830-31. Early in the latter year, they settled in the northwest quarter of Section 6, Littleton Township, where Jonathan Horney entered up 160 acres of land on the edge of the timber. This tract he improved, putting a large part of it under cultivation. In 1856 he sold his land, moving to Adams County, Ill., where he bought another tract containing 130 acres. There he died in 1885, at the age of eighty-two years. His wife, Lydia (Horney) Horney, had passed away in 1831, and he had married Agnes (Dark) Noble, who departed this in 1897. Cyrus Horney remained with his father and step-mother until he reached the age of twenty-one years, assisting on the farm and receiving his education in the primitive subscription schools of the vicinity. After his marriage he located on a farm of eighty acres in Section 12, Brooklyn Township, which was partially improved. To this he added at intervals, until he became the owner of 245 acres, lying in Sections 1, 2, 11 and 12, in that township. At the outset there was no dwelling on the place but a log cabin, and deer, wolves and wild turkey were plentiful. Mr. Horney made some improvements, putting all his land under cultivation except forty acres of timber, besides general farming, raising considerable stock. In course of time he built a six-room frame house, and had good barns and outbuildings. His successive purchase of land included tracts of 108, 65 and 36 acres, which he retained until 1897, when he disposed of a portion, selling the remainder in 1900. The 65 acres were traded for property in the village of Brooklyn, consisting of twelve lots, of which he has since sold two. In town, he has a large frame residence of eight rooms and a summer kitchen, and in this home he and his wife have lived since he withdrew from active pursuits.

Mr. Horney has been twice married. On March 28, 1846, he was joined in matrimonial bonds with Eliza Hayes, a native of Tennessee, by whom he had five children, namely: Leander, who died at the age of eight years; William, who died when twenty-one years old; Jeffrey, who lives in Decatur County, Iowa; John Franklin, who was born in January, 1852, and died at Russell, Kan., March 20, 1907; and Ann Eliza, who died in infancy. The mother of this family departed this life July 24, 1854. On July 14, 1856, Mr. Horney was united in marriage with Meribv Abercrombie, born in Shelby County, Ohio, June 30, 1839, a daughter of Thomas B. and Mary (Dey) Abercrombie, natives of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, respectively. The grandparents of Mrs. Horney were John and Mary (Cree) Abercrombie, and Louis and Mary (Beard) Dey, the paternal grandparents having been born in Pennsylvania, and those on the maternal side in New Jersey. Four children resulted from the latter union, namely: Clare (Mrs. Thomas Lantz) a resident of Brooklyn, Ill.; Jonathan B., of Bloomington, Ill., Presiding Elder in the Methodist Episcopal Church; Mary B., wife of Rev. Robert Hart-rick, D. D., of Ashland, Ill., a well known Methodist divine; and Cyrus Sloan, who carries on farming in Brooklyn Township, Schuyler County.

In politics Mr. Horney is an old-time Republican, and has been prominent and influential in local affairs. He has filled the office of Road Commissioner and served twelve years as Justice of the Peace. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he has been a classleader many years. Both are profoundly respected.

HORNEY, Samuel Madison, who is known from one end to the other of Schuyler County, Ill., as one of its most prominent and prosperous farmers, is a native of the same county, having been born in Littleton Township, May 26, 1844, a son of Leander and Jane (Crawford) Horney, North Carolinians by birth. Samuel and Amelia (Charles) Horney, the paternal grandparents, were also natives of North Carolina. Samuel Horney was a soldier in the War of 1812, and as a result of such services received a land warrant from the Government, under which he obtained 160 acres of land in Buena Vista Township, Schuyler County. He served also in the Black Hawk War, thereby securing land in Littleton Township. The grandparents on the maternal side, William and Melinda (Thompson) Crawford, were Kentuckians by nativity, and came from that State to Schuyler County, Ill., early in the 'thirties, settling in Littleton Township. Leander Horney, father of Samuel M., was an infant when brought to Schuyler County by his parents. He grew to manhood on the home farm, and in 1846 took part in the Mexican War, being wounded in the hip at the Battle of Buena Vista. Returning home in 1848, he settled down to farming in Littleton Township, and in course of time became the owner of 1,300 acres of land in different parts of Schuyler County. Five hundred acres of this property were in Littleton Township, mostly covered with timber, some of it being swamp land along the river. He served as County Surveyor previous to 1861, holding that office twelve years. On August 6, 1861, he enlisted for the Civil War, becoming a member of the Tenth Regiment, Missouri Volunteer Infantry, at St. Louis, and rising to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel. He was killed in battle at Champion Hills, Miss., near Vicksburg, in May 1863, and was buried there, his body being removed after the war and laid in Thompson Cemetery, Littleton Township. His widow made her home in the same township until the time of her death, February 20, 1907, at the age of eighty-three years. They reared a family of three sons and four daughters.

Samuel M. Horney was the second of the seven children born to his parents. He remained at home until he reached the age of 21 years, attending the district schools, and being for eight months a pupil in the select school of Mr. Marpel, at Rushville. On attaining his majority, he began farming for himself. Two years later he bought eighty acres in Section 30, Littleton Township, a part of it being prairie land and the rest covered with brush. This he improved, and occupied from the spring of 1867 until the spring of 1891, selling it in the latter year and moving to a farm of eighty acres, partially improved, which he had purchased in Section 18, of the same township. Subsequently, he bought eighty acres more in Section 19, and has since thoroughly improved the entire property. His residence is 16 by 28 feet in dimensions, with a story-and-a-half ell, and has 18-feet posts. In the spring of 1907 he bought from his mother eighty acres of land in Section 20, which adjoins the home place. Besides general farming, he is engaged in raising horses cattle and hogs, his labors being attended by profitable results. He feeds and ships two car loads of stock each year.

Mr. Horney has been twice married, his first wife being Elizabeth Sellers, to whom he was wedded in September, 1866. She was born in Littleton Township, Schuyler County, Ill., a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Ritchie) Sellers, respectively natives of Tennessee and Pennsylvania. Four children resulted from this union, as follows: Loren L., who is engaged in the general mercantile business in Littleton, Ill.; Harlan E., a physician residing in Van Alstyne, Tex.; S. Fleming, who is connected with a grocery store at Littleton, Ill.; and Eva Pearl, wife of Fred Scott, a farmer, of Littleton Township. The mother of this family died in March 1885. In May 1887, Mr. Horney was united in marriage with Frances L. Raper, born in Littleton Township, Schuyler County, and a daughter of Cyrus and Emily (Irvin) Raper, the former being born in North Carolina and the latter, in Kentucky. The issue of the second marriage was seven children, namely: Verna, who married Wallace Winters, a liveryman, of Littleton, Ill.; Clifford, Dana, Athel, Speed M., Merle and Clara R., who are with their parents. In politics, Mr. Horney is identified with the Democratic party, and he and his wife maintain a high standing among the citizens of Schuyler County.

HUNTER, George R., most favorably known throughout Central Illinois in connection with the Bank of Schuyler County, of which he is President, as well as identified with many important commercial interests elsewhere, and widely popular by reason of the sterling traits of his character, was born in Rushville, Ill., July 27, 1836. Mr. Hunter is a son of James and Johanna (Dougherty) Hunter, the father born near Lexington, Ky., and the mother at New Ross, County Wexford, Ireland. The former died August 20, 1883, the latter having passed away February 9, 1882. James Hunter was reared in Kentucky, and in the early 'thirties located in Rushville, Ill., where his marriage with Johanna Dougherty took place. In December, 1848, on account of failing health, he moved to Pleasant View, Ill., where he devoted his attention to agricultural pursuits, and besides his general farming operations, developed a fine orchard. There his death occurred, as also that of his wife, the brother of the latter, Richard Dougherty, dying the same year as his sister. Another brother, John Dougherty, who was a prominent real-estate dealer in Rushville, departed this life in the 'seventies. James Hunter's farm comprised eighty acres of land and was nicely improved. In politics, he was a Democrat, but averse to seeking public office. In religion his wife was a strict Catholic, and her husband became a convert to that faith. Both led exemplary lives and enjoyed the respect of all who knew them.

George R. Hunter, the only child of his parents, attended the public schools of Rushville, and the district schools of Schuyler County, and afterwards became a student in the Jesuit College at St. Louis, Mo. (The St. Louis University), where he took a four years' course. Then he settled on the home farm, and for a number of years derived a considerable profit from the product of his orchard already referred to, his fruit crops sometimes yielding from $4,000 to $5,000 per year.

At the time of the organization of the Bank of Schuyler County, Mr. Hunter took some of its stock, and having persistently declined the presidency of the bank, Thomas Wilson was chosen for that position, Mr. Hunter becoming Vice-President. On the death of Mr. Wilson, Mr. Hunter succeeded him as President, and has since continued in that position. He is a sagacious and conservative financier, and his individual investments of large amounts have been judicious and profitable. He is doubtless one of the wealthiest men in Central Illinois, and owns stock in quite a number of commercial enterprises in different parts of the country. Although liberal to a fault, he is utterly devoid of ostentation, shunning publicity in his benefactions, and not letting "his right hand know what his left hand doeth." No one was ever denied assistance who came in distress to George R. Hunter, and were the facts revealed, more than one man in Schuyler County has been saved by his timely aid from financial ruin. Mr. Hunter is a man of superior intelligence and wide information. Although of a retiring disposition and modest bearing, his temperament is genial, and his manner towards all affable and pleasing.

His friends are numerous, not being confined to Schuyler County or the State of Illinois, but located in every part of the country. He was never married, but extends a graceful hospitality to all guests who visit his country residence at Pleasantview, Schuyler County.

Politically, Mr. Hunter is a Democrat, and in religion is a devout Catholic, being a member of the Roman Catholic Church of Rushville, to the support of which he has contributed most liberally. He is an honored member of the Knights of Columbus.

HYMER, Samuel.—The years 1846-47 were prolific of arrivals in Schuyler County, and a general impetus in farming, merchandising and tradesmanship seems to have been the result. These were hardy souls who left comfortable homes in the East, and allied their fortunes with a religion sustained chiefly by hope and the assurance of remarkable fertility of soil. In 1837 came John and Sarah (Jackson) Hymer, the former born in Guilford County, N. C., and the latter a native of Randolph County, the same State. John Hymer had much to recommend him to the settlers who had preceded him, for he was experienced as a farmer and also had a thorough knowledge of blacksmithing. He had been an early settler of Harrison County, Ind., where he had combined farming and blacksmithing, and where his son, Samuel Hymer, the present representative of the family in Rushville Township, was born May 17, 1829. The elder Hymer located on land in Rushville Township, and for years followed farming and blacksmithing, his death occurring in 1862.

Samuel Hymer was reared to farming, and as opportunity offered attended the district school during the winter season. He married at the early age of twenty, January 18, 1849, Mary J. Thompson, of Maryland, and an early arrival in Schuyler County. Mr. Hymer enlisted in the Union Army, September 13, 1862, in the One Hundred and Fifteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served until he was mustered out May 15, 1865. His martial record was a highly commendable one, and showed him a man of courage and patriotism. Mustered in as Second Lieutenant, he soon after became First Lieutenant, and upon retiring from the service was brevetted Major. Returning to his home in Schuyler County, Mr. Hymer the following year removed to Kansas, where he engaged in general farming and stock-raising, and where, in 1871, he was ordained to the ministry of the Methodist Church. He still continued to farm, however, and also became prominent in politics, being elected to the Kansas Legislature on the Republican ticket in 1869.

In 1904, Mr. Hymer returned to Rushville, and since has lived in retirement. He has a pleasant home, and his days are brightened by association with many of the pioneers who knew him in the old days. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and fraternally is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

IRVIN, William G., known throughout Schuyler County, Ill., as the proprietor of the hotel at Brooklyn, Ill., was born near Stanford, Shelby County, Ky., January 10, 1836, a son of George Washington and Beersheba (Elmore) Irvin, also natives of that county and a grandson of Starling Irvin. George W. Irvin and his family moved from Kentucky to Schuyler County, Ill., early in the last century, traveling by wagons and settling at Rushville. The father died on his farm near Rushville about the year 1840, and five years after his death, his widow was married to John Spoonamore, and continued to reside in this vicinity. Both are long since deceased. The first marriage resulted in two sons and four daughters, and the second, in two sons and one daughter, all of whom are dead, with the exception of Zachariah T. Spoonamore, who is a resident of Cooperstown, Brown County, Ill. William G. Irvin attended school in Littleton Township, Schuyler County, remaining at home with his mother and step-father until he was fourteen years old, when he hired out on a farm. In 1863, he secured employment in the Randolph Hotel at Macomb, McDonough County, Ill., where he remained until 1870. Following this, he worked two years as a clerk in a Littleton (Ill.) store, and subsequently carried on farming for an equal period, then purchasing a general store in Doddsville, McDonough County, which he conducted until 1890, serving also as Postmaster of that town for twenty years. In the year last mentioned, he sold out his business interests in Doddsville, moving to Rushville, Schuyler County, and taking charge of Peters' Hotel, which he kept a year. On relinquishing this, he again went into the mercantile business, locating in Brooklyn, Ill., and later, building the hotel which he has since continued to operate. It has a capacity of eleven rooms, and is the only house of public entertainment ever conducted in Brooklyn.

On March 10, 1868, Mr. Irvin was united in marriage with Frances M. Brown, who was born in the vicinity of Industry, McDonough County, Ill., May 23, 1851, and is a daughter of Amos and Mary (Rolph) Brown, natives of Dayton, Ohio. Eight children resulted from this union, as follows: Estella, and Idella, twins, who were born December 26, 1869, and died January 26, 1870; Lulu May, born February 26, 1871; Maude, born June 26, 1873, deceased August 26, 1873; Vivian Randolph, born August 17, 1876; Jennie, born May 13, 1880; William F., born November 2, 1883; and Mary Hulda, born December 9, 1889. Lula M. married James Merriweather, of New London, Iowa; Vivian R. is engaged in the wholesale grocery business at Galesburg, Ill., under the firm name of the Galesburg Grocery Company; Jennie is the wife of Frank Manlove, of Augusta, Ill.; William F. is in the mercantile trade in Brooklyn, Ill., and holds the office of Postmaster of the town, residing with his parents; and Mary H. is also at home.

Mr. Irvin joined the Baptist Church at Dodds-ville in 1882, but is now a member of the Presbyterian Church, of Brooklyn, there being no church of the former denomination in the village. In politics, he has long been a Republican. He and his wife, together with the other members of the family, are highly respected.

JARMAN, Lewis A.—For many years public opinion has accorded Lewis A. Jarman a foremost place among the citizens and legal practitioners of Schuyler County, and so stable a fixture has he become in the affairs of Rushville that his election to his present position as Mayor, in April, 1905, would seem a natural and expected continuation of the many honors growing out of his ability, integrity and large capacity for useful citizenship.

Of Southern ancestry on both sides of his family, Mr. Jarman was born in Greensboro, Md., September 28, 1858, a son of Thomas H. and Mary E. (Lewis) Jarman, natives of Maryland and Delaware, respectively. His grandparents, Thomas H. and Elizabeth Jarman, were born in Maryland, and his maternal grandparents, Thomas H. and Sabra Lewis, were natives of Delaware and Maryland, respectively. Completing his preliminary education at the Western Maryland College, at Westminster, he then entered the Maryland University, at Baltimore, and after graduating therefrom in the class of 1881, spent a year acquiring the rudiments of law in a law office in Baltimore, and has been in the active practice of law in Rushville since 1882, building upon the foundation of splendid personal qualities, a reputation for reliable, conservative and dependable professional service.

An abiding belief in the best tenets of the Republican party has led Mr. Jarman to espouse its cause with vigor and enthusiasm, and through various local official channels he has labored to promote the best interests of the community. Mr. Jarman was a delegate from the Fifteenth Congressional District to the Republican National Convention in June, 1904, and in April, 1905, was elected chief executive of the city of Rushville. His marriage to Lizzie B. Ray, a native of Rushville and graduate of the Northwestern University, at Evanston, Ill., occurred June 26, 1889. The distinguishing characteristics of Mr. Jarman are force of character, indomitable energy and executive ability, potent agencies for the advancement of men to important stations in life.

JONES, Edward J.—Although a resident in other sections of the country for brief periods, Mr. Jones has always been anxious to return to Schuyler County, and here practically all of his active life has been passed. At this writing he resides on North Maple Avenue, Rushville, where he owns two residence properties, and in addition is the owner of an improved farm of 160 acres in Oakland Township. The latter township is the place of his birth, April 12, 1842, being the date thereof. His father, James Thompson Jones, was one of the honored pioneers of Schuyler County, whose memory long will remain green in the hearts of those bound to him by ties of kinship or friendship. In physique he was very tall and finely proportioned, and his height led to his selection as color-bearer in the days when military feeling ran high and when preparations for war were being made on every hand. The son of a Whig, he himself was an ardent Democrat and never failed to give his allegiance to the principles and candidates of that party.

A native of Havre de Grace, Md., James Thompson Jones was born June 19, 1812, and in boyhood went to Pennsylvania with his father, Edward J., (also a native of Maryland). The family settled in Washington County, where his father died and was buried in the Bethel Church Cemetery. Upon starting out to make his own way in the world he came to Illinois and took up land in Oakland Township, Schuyler County, where he began the clearing of his land. After the death of his first wife he returned to Pennsylvania and there married Mary Perine, born in 1816. While they were living in Pennsylvania, a son, Stephen P., was born in August of 1840. Later they came to Illinois and the second son, Edward J., was born in Oakland Township, which also was the birthplace of the third son, David, who died at the age of twenty-one. The wife and mother died on the home farm February 6, 1844. Later the father went back to Pennsylvania and in 1846 married Dorcas Gorsuch, who was born in Virginia, and accompanied her father, Nicholas Gorsuch, a Virginian by birth and ancestry, to Pennsylvania. During 1852, James T. Jones again came to Schuyler County and took up farming pursuits in Oakland Township, where four children were born of his union with Miss Gorsuch, namely: Elizabeth, now the widow of Abram Bly and a resident of Oakland Township; Mary, wife of Newton Edmonston, a farmer of Oakland Township; George W., who is represented elsewhere in this work; and John Jones, a carpenter living in Rushville. The father died September 7, 1871, and was buried in a cemetery near Vermont, Ill. For years he had served as Justice of the Peace, besides which he had been Road Commissioner and a member of the County Board of Supervisors. A natural mechanic, his skill with tools led him to do considerable carpentering and he also was engaged at the trade of brick-mason to some extent.

Upon leaving the old home farm at the age of twenty-five years, Edward J. Jones went to Missouri and there worked for eighteen months. However, he was not satisfied to remain in that country and returned to his early home. November 28, 1894, he married Ella Tutt, who was born in Rushville Township January 24, 1867, being a daughter of James and Marietta Tutt, natives of Kentucky but pioneers of Schuyler County. Here Mr. Tutt died in October, 1893, and here his widow still makes her home in Rushville Township. After remaining on the home farm for some years, in 1899 Mr. and Mrs. Jones removed to Rushville, their present home. They have two children, namely: Lolla Edna, born February 8, 1896; and Herman, born December 3, 1901. The family attend the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which Mrs. Jones is an active member. Three times Mr. Jones was elected Supervisor from Oakland Township, and in addition he filled the office of Road Commissioner during his residence in that township.

JONES, George W.—It is significant of the energy and judgment of Mr. Jones that he has risen to a position of independence without the prestige of capital or influence to aid him in starting. When he became a land-holder in Schuyler County, he acquired the title to eighty acres on Section 34, Oakland Township, but he lacked $200 of having sufficient money to pay for the land at the time of its purchase. A part of the tract was not cleared and he at once began to remove the heavy timber, thus placing the land in condition for cultivation. The first indebtedness was soon paid. Then he purchased additional land, and from time to time he acquired other tracts until now he owns 490 acres in one body in Oakland Township, this representing the energy and wise management of his active years.

The record of the Jones family, which appears in the sketch of Edward J. Jones on another page, shows that they came from Maryland, the grandfather, Edward J., and the father, James T., having both been natives of that State, but subsequently residents of Washington County, Pa., from which the latter migrated to Illinois in an early day and settled in Schuyler County. Among the children born of his marriage to Miss Gorsuch was George W., whose birth occurred August 16, 1853, on the farm in Rushville Township now owned by F. P. Richey. During boyhood he accompanied the family to Oakland Township, where he attended school and learned the rudiments of agriculture, to which his life has been devoted. After the death of his father in 1872, he left the home roof and began working for others, receiving $18 per month, which was at that time the very highest wages paid to farm hands.

The marriage of George W. Jones and Phoebe Jane Rose was solemnized March 6, 1878. Mrs. Jones was born in Chelsea, Washtenaw County, Michigan, October 22, 1854, being a daughter of Warren P. and Mary (DePenw) Rose. The family came to Illinois about 1857 and settled in Schuyler County, where Mr. Rose cleared a tract of land in Rushville Township and improved a good farm. After the death of his wife in 1893, he removed to Iowa, dying there in 1896. All of his seven children survive him, namely: Hardin C., of Ray, Ill.; Henry B., a farmer in Littleton Township; Mrs. Jones; Richard, of Beardstown, Ill.; Edna, wife of Charles E. Chipman, of Davenport, Thayer County, Neb.; Mira, wife of Gilbert McMillen; and Annie E., Mrs. Samuel E. Simpson, of Oakland Township. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Jones are as follows: Mary F., who was born December 1, 1878, and died March 1, 1907; David P., born August 15, 1880; Edna V., who was born November 20, 1882, and is now Mrs. U. Sowers, of Oakland Township; Aunie E., who was born March 26, 1885, and married Lewis Heaton, of Vermont, Ill.; Maude E., born May 29, 1888; George E. and James E. (twins) born March 24, 1891; Carrie, June 10, 1893; and Ura Glenn, October 26, 1896. In working to improve his farm Mr. Jones had the assistance of his children until they, one by one, started out to earn their own way in the world, but the younger still remain to bless the home with their cheerful presence and brighten the lives of their parents with their sympathy and ready aid. Politically Mr. Jones has always been a staunch Democrat and on that ticket, has been elected to various local offices; the Christian Church, of which he is an earnest member, has had the benefit of his generous contributions, as well as the co-operation and aid of his family.

JUSTUS, Moses L. (deceased), for many years connected with the milling business in Schuyler County, Ill., but who spent his last years in retirement at Browning, same county, was born in Hancock County, Ill., December 12, 1831, a son of George W. and Susan (Bates) Justus. The birth of Moses L. Justus occurred while his parents were traveling by wagon to the west. George W. Justus was born in Middle Tennessee about the year 1795, and in 1828 was married to Susan Bates, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Bates, of Kentucky. When a young man he followed the occupation of a teacher, but in later years devoted his attention to agricultural pursuits. They settled at Grand Island, Browning Township, Schuyler County, but later, for some time lived at Sumnum, Fulton County. George W. Justus became the owner of considerable tracts of land. He died at the home of his son, F. M. Justus, at the age of sixty-six years, his wife having passed away one year previous to the decease of her husband.

The early life of Moses L. Justus was passed in Schuyler County, where he received his education in the common schools. His marriage took place in 1857, when he was united with Martha A. Steppe, a daughter of John L. Steppe and wife, natives of Tennessee. In politics, Mr. Justus was a supporter of the Democratic party. He was a habitual abstainer from all intoxicating liquors, and a strong advocate of temperance principles. His decease occurred January 30, 1908.

JUSTUS, Dr. William F., a well-known, efficient and popular physician of Littleton, Schuyler County, Ill., was born in Browning, Schuyler County, May 29, 1872 a son of Moses L. and Martha A. (Steppe) Justus. (A sketch of the father, with other facts of ancestral history, appears in a preceding section of this biographical portion of the work.) William F. Justus received his education in the public schools of Browning Township, and in the Illinois State Normal University, at Normal. At the age of nineteen years, he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons, at Keokuk, Iowa, from which he was graduated in 1892. He then began the practice of medicine at Industry, McDonough County, Ill., where he continued in practice until 1897. In the spring of 1898, in company with a party of six residents of Rushville, Ill., he made a trip to Alaska. Returning after a sojourn of four months in that region, he located in Littleton, Ill., there resuming the practice of his profession on January 1, 1899. Since then, through skillful methods and close attention to duty, Dr. Justus has succeeded in acquiring a substantial patronage in Littleton and the surrounding country, and has gained an enviable reputation as a practitioner of solid attainments in medical science and as a strict adherent of the highest ethics of the healing art.

On April 7, 1894, Dr. Justus was united in marriage with Anna M. Garrison, who was born in Littleton Township, February 28, 1874. Mrs. Justus is a daughter of Henry W. and Anna M. (Justus) Garrison. Her father is a native of Ohio, while the birthplace of her mother was Brooklyn Township, Schuyler County. One child is the issue of this union, Ansel Howard, born May 26, 1895.

Politically, Dr. Justus is a supporter of the principles of the Democratic party, and has served one term in the office of Supervisor of Littleton Township. In fraternal circles, he is identified with the M. W. and the M. W. A., of Littleton, the I. O. O. F., of Rushville, Ill.; and the B. P. O. E., of Macomb, McDonough County. Dr. Justus has won the confidence of those who have availed themselves of his professional services, and of the public in general, and socially he and his estimable wife maintain a deservedly high standing.

KELLY, James M.—The present high social and financial standing of James M. Kelly among his acquaintances in Schuyler County is a tribute to his indomitable energy and to the perseverance with which, unaided, he has fought the battle of life ever since he was a lad of tender years. As a soldier in the Civil War he took part in many sanguinary engagements and faced many business interests; is a stockholder and fles he has also had many struggles, but in both he has been victorious. Through much of his active life he followed agricultural pursuits, but of recent years he has retired to some extent from the manual labor connected with the development of a farm. However, he still retains many business interests, is a stockholder and director in the People's State Bank of Astoria, and is President of the Deep Water Commission of Brown and Schuyler Counties. Kelly lake and branch were named in his honor, and in many ways he has left the impress of his forceful personality upon the locality where for years he has been a leading citizen.

In Vermont Township, Fulton County, Ill., James M. Kelly was born September 7, 1844, the third child of Franklin B. and Elizabeth (Hollingsworth) Kelly. The former was born in Fleming County, Ky., December 25, 1812, a son of Francis F. Kelly. About 1836 he migrated to Fulton County, Ill., and secured a claim near the village of Vermont, where he died about 1853, when James M. was nine years of age. The members of the family were as follows: Francis M., who was a member of the Fifty-first Illinois Infantry during the Civil War and died in Fulton County about 1875; Caroline, who married Titus Andrews, of Hollenberg, Washington County, Kan.; James M.; Emily, wife of John Swink, of Washington, Kan.; Cynthia A. Mrs. Evert Bingham; Sarah, Mrs. Harlow Palmer; and Margaret, who died in girlhood.

Had the life of Franklin B. Kelly been spared to old age, undoubtedly he would have attained flattering success, as at his death in middle age he owned a farm of 100 acres, the fruits of his unaided efforts. This he left to his sons, Francis M. and James M., they to operate the land and support the other members of the family. The mother remained at the old homestead until her death, and the sisters also grew to womanhood there, leaving the old roofree for homes of their own. The younger son, James M., not being old enough at his father's death to assist greatly in the development of the farm, started out in the world to earn his own way. At the age of eleven years he went to Macomb, where he worked for his board. His employer was a drover and the boy thus had an opportunity of working with horses, an occupation of which he was fond. In 1856 he returned to the old home. Two years later, in the fall of 1858, he came to Schuyler County and began to work by the month for his mother's father, with whom he lived until his enlistment in the army.

When the call came for soldiers to aid in the preservation of the Union, the patriotic spirit of James M. Kelly was aroused, and on October 20, 1861, he enlisted at Peoria, Ill., as a private in Company G, Eleventh Illinois Cavalry, commanded by Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll. The regiment rode on horseback to Benton Barracks. In the spring of 1862 they went from St. Louis to Pittsburg Landing. The Eleventh bore an active part in many sanguinary engagements. Their record was one of which their friends felt proud, and which even to this day brings its members many flattering testimonials. Their baptism of fire came at Shiloh, where at sunrise they saw the enemy's colors waving in the distance as they approached for action. About eleven o'clock General Prentiss was captured. All day the battle raged fiercely and the brave Eleventh fought desperately to defend the Infantry. On the second day relief came and about twelve o'clock on the 7th of April, the enemy was driven back and the field was left to the dead and the dying. Again at Corinth the Eleventh defended the Infantry amid great peril. Other and later battles brought them added laurels of fame. The arduous campaign with Sherman to the sea found them ever at their post of duty. After the surrender of the Confederacy, Company G proceeded to Washington and took part in the grand review as escort to General Frank P. Blair, being honored with that position in recognition of meritorious conduct at the battle of Hatchie's Run. Through much of the active service Mr. Kelly acted as Orderly and carried messages long distances from one General to another, or from the officers to his comrades.

After having been honorably discharged at Louisville, Kentucky, in July of 1865, James M. Kelly returned via Springfield to Fulton County, Ill., and from there again came to Schuyler County. Going back to Fulton County in 1868, he rented a farm and in March, 1869, married Miss Emily, daughter of Joseph Kelly and a native of Illinois. Though bearing the same family name, the two were not blood relations. Subsequent to his marriage Mr. Kelly rented a farm in Browning Township, Schuyler County. In 1879, he bought 128 acres on Section 17, Hickory Township, where he and his wife lived in a log cabin until they accumulated the means necessary for erecting a better house. From time to time he added to his possessions and now owns 375 acres, all in one body.

The eldest child of Mr. and Mrs. Kelly is Laura, born March 18, 1871; she married Charles Harmon, of Canton, Ill., and has two children, Clarence W. and Emily Ethel. The second child in the Kelly family is Abbie, born September 28, 1875, who married James D. Woolley, and has two children, Fay, born July 19, 1895, and Mae, born May 3, 1897; they reside on the old homestead. The third child, Helen, born June 11, 1877, married Fred A. Schultz of Peoria, Ill., and has one child, born February 12, 1897. The fourth child of Mr. Kelly is James Francis, born August 29, 1880, and now managing the old home farm on Section 17, Hickory Township. The youngest child, Bertha, was born August 26, 1882, and is now the wife of Edward Sackman of Peoria. For twenty-five years Mr. Kelly served as School Director and meanwhile accomplished much for the upbuilding of the schools of his district. Politically he is a staunch Republican. Though living in a Democratic township, he has been three times elected on the Republican ticket as a member of the County Board of Supervisors, and the fact that he overcame the usual large majority of the opposite party speaks much for his personal popularity. As a member of the board he proved useful and efficient and assisted in promoting the interests of his township as well as the general welfare of his county.

KENNEDY, Maxwell (deceased), was born in Logan County, Ky., near the Tennessee line, July 4, 1847. His parents removed to Canton, Ill., in the year 1849, where they resided six months, going from there to McDonough County and locating on a farm near Vermont. Here Mr. Kennedy grew to manhood, receiving his early education in the country district schools, and later attended the Vermont school. When sixteen years of age he began his career as a teacher, his first school being at Foster's Point. He later attended Eastman's Business College at Chicago, where he laid the broad foundation for his future successful work along similar lines. After returning from school he decided to take up mercantile work, and secured a position as bookkeeper for a Mr. Ravenscroft, at Versailles, but he soon gave this up to resume teaching, his next position being at Quincy, where he taught several years. From Quincy he went to Industry and later to Macomb, removing to Rushville in 1885, where he resided until a few days before his death.

He was twice married. His first wife was Miss Jennie Greenup of Industry, and they were married in March, 1874. She accompanied him to Rushville, and died in this city, January 10, 1889, leaving one son, Charles, now a resident of San Francisco, Cal. Prof. Kennedy was married to Miss Elizabeth Ellison of Vermont, December 30, 1890, and she survives with one son, Lloyd, to mourn the loss of a devoted husband and father.

He was a member of the M. E. church, and in his private and public life he met the full responsibilities that devolve upon the true teacher, who has in his charge the moral as well as the mental training of the young mind.

Prof. Maxwell Kennedy, former President of the Rushville Normal and Business College, at Rushville, and also proprietor of a similar school in Macomb, Ill., died suddenly at Vermont, Ill., July 9, 1908.

KERR, John.—An instructive example of what may be accomplished by fixed purpose, tenacity of will, diligent exertion and strict honesty, may be found in the life of the worthy retired farmer of Rushville, Schuyler County, Ill., whose name appears above, and who, although beginning his active career with no extraneous aid, started out as a young lad in the struggle for self-support, and won success by untiring perseverance and thrifty economy. Mr. Kerr was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, in 1840. His father, John Kerr was a native of the same county in Ireland, and the birthplace of his mother, Rebecca (Weir) Kerr, was in Scotland. Neither of them ever came to the United States.

John Kerr, to whom this personal record pertains, attended the grammar schools of County Tyrone during his boyhood, and accompanied his brother to this country when he was about twenty-one years of age. His first location was at Newark, N. J., where he was employed for a few years in the milk business. Following this he obtained work in a woolen mill in the same city, remaining in that connection until 1869, when he moved to Illinois, settling at Rushville. There he was engaged in general farming, with uniform success until his retirement from active pursuits. He devoted considerable attention also to the operation of coal mines on his land, with profitable results.

The marriage of Mr. Kerr took place in his native country in 1859, being then wedded to Eleanor Bell, a daughter of Robert and Anna (Mayne) Bell, who spent their entire lives in Ireland, where they were born. Mr. and Mrs. Kerr became the parents of the following children, namely: Catherine B.; Joseph A.; Annie E.; Robert J.; James F.; William T.; Charles A.; and May L. In religious belief, Mr. Kerr is an earnest and consistent Methodist, and is a member of the official board of the local church to which he belongs. Politically he is a steadfast supporter of the policies of the Republican party, is looked upon as one of the most substantial members of the community and one of its most exemplary citizens.

KING, Arthur C.—During the entire half century of his life, Arthur C. King has lived on the farm in Section 4, Huntsville Township, where he was born August 12, 1857. As a boy, when general conditions were cruder and less prosperous, he bent his strength to small and unimportant tasks, and as a man of wide experience and worthy ambitions, he is the sole owner of this fine property, with its stretch of 280 acres, and its adaptation to all the needs of the Central Western farmer. His enviable reputation rests principally upon his success as a stock-raiser, for it is this branch of farming that he finds most congenial, and to which he brings to bear his greatest research and most untiring industry. Mr. King owns a large and comfortable country residence, well constructed barns and outbuildings and well considered facilities for caring for stock. During a year he disposes of at least 200 head of Short-horn cattle for butchering, and many more for milking and breeding purposes, besides 150 head of hogs, and a large number of horses. His opinion regarding stock bears great weight in the community, and his advice and counsel are often sought by those of less experience along these lines.

Mr. King was reared to farming by his father, Lewis King, and his education was acquired in the public schools. He evidenced early business sagacity, and was keen at a trade long before he settled down to the serious responsibility of self-support. He has always made his work count, a fact which enabled him to buy out ten heirs to the old homestead in 1888, and in the future to pay his own taxes and direct his own farming enterprise. February 22, 1899, he was united in marriage to Louise Stahman, at Carthage, Ohio, the home of the bride's brother, Charles Stahman. Mrs. King having been born in Weisberg, Ind., November 9, 1866. She is a daughter of Henry Stahman, and Dora (Keeher) Stahman, natives of Germany, who died when she was a small child, the mother in 1875 and the father the following year. There were seven children in the Stahman family, of whom Caroline, Henry and Minnie are deceased, as is also Laura, twin of Frederick, the latter of whom survived until his sixteenth year. Mrs. King lived with a sister after the death of her parents, and when nineteen years old began to make her own living as a clerk in the general merchandise store of F. M. King, of Augusta, brother of her husband, and it was there that she met the man who subsequently became her husband. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. King; an infant, deceased; Harriet Dorothy, born July 15, 1902; and Theodore Henry, born September 27, 1907. Mr. and Mrs. King are active members of the Presbyterian Church, of Huntsville. Mr. King is a Republican in politics, but is not active except at the polls. He is highly esteemed for his ability, public spiritedness and integrity, and well deserves the success and influence which have gathered around his life.

KING, Louis F.—The ancestry of the King family is traced to French-Canadian lineage and became identified with the development of New York. Lewis R. King, who was the son of Jonas King, a soldier of the War of 1812, was born and reared in New State. Upon starting out as a farmer he and a brother, C. D. King, bought land in Schuyler County near the village of Brooklyn. During 1839 he visited his old home in New York, but returned in a few months to his farm work in the West. In 1841 occurred his marriage to Harriet McKee, who was born in Manchester, Conn., of English ancestry, and about 1836 came to Illinois with an uncle, Elisha Olcott, who became a prominent pioneer merchant of Hancock County. During the Mormon disturbances in Hancock County, Mr. King, acting as a citizen, joined a movement which had for its object the suppression of disorder and the preservation of law, and while thus engaged witnessed the arrest and imprisonment of the two Smiths (Joseph and Hyrum) which preceded their assassination by shooting, at the Hancock County jail in Carthage, on June 27, 1844.

Immediately west of Brooklyn, on land now owned by Jonas King, was the first home of Lewis R. King after his marriage, but about 1849, he purchased 300 acres of wild land in Huntsville Township, where afterward he improved a valuable farm, erected substantial buildings and placed the land in a good state of cultivation. On his farm there was a burying ground (now abandoned), and here may still be seen a marble slab that marks the last resting-place of A. W. Dorsey, the only teacher whom Abraham Lincoln ever had. On one occasion when that famous President was traveling through Western Illinois, he stopped at Huntsville in order that he might visit the grand old man who had been the instructor of his early days. After his visit he proceeded to Macomb, where he held one of the memorable debates of 1858 with Douglas.

The family of Lewis R. King comprised ten children, all but one of whom are yet living. Milton is a farmer in Hancock County, Ill.;

Elizabeth and Frederick live in Augusta, Hancock County, across the line from Schuyler County; Sophia married J. M. Reed, of Birmingham; Adelaide was for a few years a leading merchant of Camp Point, Adams County; Henry H. died in 1906 near Mountain Grove, Mo.; Arthur C. occupies the old homestead in Huntsville Township; Mrs. Louise Stahl resides at Fowler, Ill.; Harriet makes her home in Augusta; and Louis F. is the owner of Oak Mound farm on Section 16, Huntsville Township. The last-named was born at the old homestead near Huntsville May 2, 1868, and was about twelve years of age when he was bereaved by the death of his mother, April 26, 1880. The father survived for many years passing away January 14, 1901, deeply mourned by family and friends. In the Presbyterian Church of Huntsville his loss was felt, for he long was a leader in the work, an elder of the church, and Superintendent of the Sunday school. The Bible was ever his favorite book, and many hours were spent each week in the study of its pages. Thus he acquired a thorough knowledge of its contents and became a ready and fluent speaker upon religious subjects. It was always his endeavor to live up to the precepts of the Scriptures. His life was patterned after the great example given us in the life of the founder of Christianity. During the existence of the Whig party he voted that ticket, but upon the disintegration of the party he became identified with the Republicans. The holding of office was averse to his tastes and invariably he declined political honors.

Excellent educational advantages were given to Louis F. King, who attended the country schools in Huntsville Township, the high school in Augusta, and Knox College in Galesburg, where he was a student for four years during the presidency of Hon. Newton Bateman, enjoying the opportunity of study under the preceptorship of that cultured scholar. At the expiration of a four-years' course he was given the degree of Bachelor of Science. On his return to his home he took up agricultural work. November 17, 1903, he was united in marriage with Miss Martha F. Whetstone, daughter of Marcus Whetstone, a well-known pioneer farmer of Schuyler County. After his marriage Mr. King brought his bride to a farm he had purchased in 1898, comprising 220 acres on Section 16, Huntsville Township, and here he has since engaged in general farming. He and his wife have a son, Paul Whetstone, born December 2, 1904. In religion they are identified with the Presbyterian Church at Huntsville, in which he officiates as an elder. Politically he is a staunch Republican.

Five hundred and twenty acres of land are under the control of Mr. King and his wife. A believer in scientific agriculture, Mr. King puts his theories into actual practice and ever has been a leader, not a follower. In his own county he has officiated as Vice-President of the Farmers' Institute, besides which he has been called frequently to other counties to participate in institute work, and many of his articles have been published in agricultural papers, thus giving to other farmers the benefit of his progressive ideas. One of his theories is that only first-class stock can profitably be kept on high-priced farm land, and on his own place a visitor sees none but the best grades. As early as 1900 he began to experiment with alfalfa, at a time when most farmers believed it could not be grown as far east as this. His success proved that its cultivation could be prosecuted with profit, and in the last season (1907) he secured three cuttings from his 20 acres of alfalfa, besides which he could have cut a fourth crop, had he not considered it advisable to allow it to be pastured by the stock. The fact that this kind of hay can be raised successfully is of decided benefit to the farmers of the county, many of whom have taken up the work, encouraged by the success of those who were pioneers in the movement.

KINSEY, William Harrison.—The life record of William Harrison Kinsey has been one of obstacles overcome, opportunities turned to good account, and obligations discharged with credit and discretion. In the past this prosperous farmer boy of Woodstock Township was known as a struggling farmer boy with few opportunities to promote his rising interests, or encourage him when thrown much earlier than the average upon his own responsibilities. He has successfully weathered many storms of adversity, and has demonstrated the ability of strong natures to see beyond their immediate horizon, and to endure and hope when others fall by the wayside. Born in Woodland Township, Fulton County, Ill., April 13, 1861, he is a son of John and Frances (Boyd) Kinsey, the former born in Pennsylvania and the latter in Ohio. The paternal grandparents of William Harrison came to Pleasant Township, Fulton County, Ill., about 1829, finding few there to greet them, or share with them the hardships of a frontier existence. Their farm in the vicinity of Ipava largely was covered with timber and underbrush, but this eventually was cleared, and the family assumed a proud and commanding position in the community. Being among the very earliest settlers, they kept pace with the advance of community, and were respected both for their financial ability and their many fine personal qualities. No exception to the character and ability of this family was found in John R. Kinsey, father of William Harrison, who in youth learned the blacksmith trade, and followed the same after moving to Sheldon's Grove in 1861. When the war called his attention from accustomed labor, he enlisted in Company F, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served three years as a Union soldier, or until his honorable discharge at the end of the war. Returning to his home, he again worked at blacksmithing, and later accepted a position as watchman on one of the boats plying between Peoria and St. Louis, on the Mississippi River. It is supposed that he was drowned while on one of these trips, as he never since has been heard from. The wife who survived him married Henry Swan, and died in Beards-town in February, 1875. There were two children born of her first marriage, William Harrison and George H., the latter of whom died at the age of twenty years. By her second marriage there was a son, David, now deceased.

At Sheldon's Grove, William Harrison Kinsey worked at farming, and practically began his wage-earning career at the age of thirteen years. His first school teacher was Quinn Harrison, and to the kindly interest and good judgment of this early master does he attribute much of the success which has come his way. When very young Mr. Kinsey went to work for his uncle, Warren Spiller, receiving for the first two years fifty dollars a year, and for the last three years thirteen dollars a month. Leaving his uncle in 1882, he went to Cass County, Ill., and worked there for a Mr. Strubble, and in December of the same year returned to Schuyler County, where on September 11, 1884, he was united in marriage to Della M. Miller. Mrs. Kinsey was born in Rushville Township, Schuyler County, May 22, 1866, a daughter of John Henry and Sarah F. (Holland) Miller, natives of Germany and Tennessee, respectively. Mr. and Mrs. Miller were married in Frederick, Ill., and soon after settled in Rushville Township, where they became prominent and wealthy general farmers. Mr. Miller died February 13, 1902, and his wife died February 28, 1905. Both were devout Christians, and both were active in their respective churches, Lutheran and Methodist Episcopal.

After his marriage Mr. Kinsey settled in Rushville Township, and there lived until moving to Woodstock Township, and to the farm he now owns in 1888. He has been successful beyond his most sanguine expectations, now being the owner of 346 acres of valuable land, 183 acres in Woodstock, and 163 acres in Buena Vista Township. This property is highly cultivated and devoted to general farming. Mr. Kinsey has spared no pains to surround himself and family with the best possible influences, and few country homes furnish evidence of more regard for refinement and the better things of life.

Formerly Mr. Kinsey was a Democrat, but he now is a staunch supporter of the Prohibition cause. He is a devoutly religious man, a member of long standing of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and a great worker in the Sunday school. He is a member of the Mutual Patriarch League. Mr. and Mrs. Kinsey are the parents of seven children: Winnie F., born August 4, 1885; George H., born September 26, 1887, a graduate of the Rushville Normal Commercial School, class of 1906-07; Uriah L., born January 29, 1888, died in infancy; Frederick J., born April 18, 1889; John, born January 29, 1891; Margaret, born July 27, 1894; and Elizabeth, born October 3, 1906.

KIRKHAM, George H., well known in connection with "Sunny View Stock Farm," in Sections 35 and 36, Littleton Township, Schuyler County, Ill., and long a man of prominence and influence in his locality, was born in Schuyler County April 22, 1841, a son of Henry and Elizabeth (Henkle) Kirkham, and a grandson of Henry Kirkham, whose birth occurred in Virginia, September 2, 1769, and great-grandson of Michael Kirkham, a native of Ireland. Henry Kirkham, father of George H., was born in Butler County, Ohio, and was married in that State to Elizabeth Henkle, coming with his wife to Schuyler County, Ill., in the early 'thirties. He first bought 100 acres of land in Woodstock Township, which he cleared of timber and improved, living there until 1864. In that year he sold this farm, and purchased eighty-two acres of prairie land in Buena Vista Township, on which he followed farming until the time of his death, in September, 1898. His wife passed away in 1847.

George H. Kirkham remained with his father until he was twenty years old, attending the district schools up to that period. On August 15, 1861, he enlisted in Company G, Twenty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, under Capt. B. C. Gillam, the regiment being assigned to the Army of the Tennessee. The first battle in which he took part was that of Shiloh, and he afterwards participated in the Siege of Corinth; the engagement at Hatchie Bridge, Miss.; the Siege of Vicksburg; the engagement at Jackson, Miss.; and the capture of Fort Blakely near Mobile. At the Siege of Vicksburg, he was struck on the shoulder by a spent bullet. On the termination of hostilities in that quarter, his regiment was sent to Texas, where he served from April, 1865, until April 6, 1866, when he was mustered out as a non-commissioned officer, to which grade he had been appointed in 1863. After arriving at home he worked for his father one season, and subsequently followed farming on rented land in Woodstock and Buena Vista Townships. He continued thus for four years after his marriage, and then obtained from his father-in-law, 200 acres of land lying in Sections 35 and 36, Littleton Township. Of this, 140 acres are cleared and under improvement, and the rest is in timber and pasture. He has greatly improved the property. For the first season, he and his family occupied a log cabin, and then he bought a small dwelling a mile distant and moved it on to his place. The residence in which the family now lives was built by him in 1882. He is engaged in general farming, and besides growing small grains, devotes considerable attention to raising horses, cattle and hogs.

The marriage of Mr. Kirkham took place November 6, 1869, at which time he was wedded to Annie E. Garrison, who was born in Littleton Township, Schuyler County, Ill., and is a daughter of George and Sarah (Vail) Garrison, both natives of Ohio. Eight children have been the issue of this union, as follows: Charles Lewis, born January 6, 1872, and is engaged in the practice of osteopathy, at Newcastle, Pa.; Elizabeth Lorena, born March 27, 1873, and became the wife of William Blodgett, of Rushville, Ill.; Iva Frances, born November 16, 1874, and living at home; William Ray, of Buena Vista Township, Schuyler County, born December 14, 1876; Myrtle Grace, born August 14, 1878, and married W. C. Crawford; George Henry, born May 16, 1882, who is employed in a wagon manufactory at Quincy, Ill.; Anna Bessie Maude, born September 4, 1884, who married L. Dean Dixon, of Columbus, Mont.; and James Orrin, born January 4, 1888.

In politics, Mr. Kirkham has been long identified with the Republican party, and served one year as Township Collector. He and his wife are communicants of the Christian Church, in which he has officiated as deacon since 1882. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., having joined the Littleton (Ill.) lodge of that order, in 1890. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, Post No. 131, of Rushville. No man in Littleton Township is more sincerely respected than George H. Kirkham, and he and his wife enjoy the cordial esteem of a wide acquaintance.

LAMBERT, William, in duration of residence, one of the oldest citizens of Schuyler County, Ill., and formerly one of the most substantial and prosperous farmers of Littleton Township, is now spending the evening of his life in comfortable retirement in the village of Littleton, Schuyler County. Mr. Lambert was born in Mercer County, Ky., January 1, 1832, a son of William and Catherine (Dennis) Lambert, natives of that State. His maternal grandfather, Richard Dennis, was a Virginian by birth. William and Catherine (Dennis) Lambert moved with their family from Kentucky to Rushville, Ill., in the fall of 1836, and the father kept a hotel there until the time of his death in April, 1844. After his decease, his widow sold the hotel, continuing to reside in Rushville until she passed away in 1852. He had been perviously married, and had three sons by his first wife, namely: Samuel, who was a soldier in the Mexican War, holding the rank of Lieutenant; Henry, also a soldier in the Mexican War under Capt. Dunlap of Rushville, and John, all of whom are deceased. William Lambert was the eldest of the offspring of the second marriage, the others being, Robert, who died in Littleton Township, in 1891; and Mary Jane, wife of M. O. Snyder, Postmaster of Littleton, Schuyler County.

William Lambert received his education in the schools of Rushville, Ill., to which place he was brought by his parents when four years old. At the age of fifteen years he began working for himself, and continued thus, on different farms, until he reached the age of twenty years. Shortly after this period, having married, he acquired, together with his brother Robert, a quarter section of wild prairie land, which they improved. In 1854, Mr. Lambert sold his interest in this property to his brother, and bought from his father-in-law eighty acres in Section 22, Littleton Township. After the death of the latter, the other eighty acres of his farm, which was improved land, became the inheritance of Mrs.

Lambert. A few years later, Mr. Lambert bought 160 acres of unimproved land, lying in Sections 11 and 12 of the same township. He now owns 320 acres in Schuyler County besides city property in Littleton. Forty acres of this second purchase he fenced and improved, putting it under cultivation and leaving the remainder for pasture. Here he was successfully engaged in farming until 1904, when he abandoned active labors, moving to the village of Littleton, where he purchased a commodious residence now occupied by himself and wife, together with a young lady, Florence Snyder, whom they reared from childhood.

Mr. Lambert has been twice married, his first wife having been Josephine Rose, to whom he was wedded April 8, 1852. She was born in Littleton Township, Schuyler County, in June, 1834, a daughter of Randolph and Sarah (Tullis) Rose, natives of Kentucky. Six children were the issue of this union, as follows: Mabel, who is the widow of George Little, and resides in Littleton, Ill.; William, a resident of Galesburg, Ill.; Ella (Mrs. Richard Leach), of Plano, Ill.; Josephine (Mrs. Henry Jackson) whose home is in Wisconsin; Edward, who operates the home-stead farm; and Fannie (Mrs. John P. Walker), who resides in Chicago. Josephine (Rose) Lambert passed away in April, 1895. On November 30, 1897, Mr. Lambert was united in marriage with Anna Little, who was born in Adams County, Pa., April 13, 1838, a daughter of Robert and Eliza (Cunningham) Little, natives of Ireland, where the father was born in County Tyrone, and the mother in Belfast. The parents of Mrs. Lambert came to Rushville, Ill., in 1850, settling in the vicinity of the town. Her paternal grandfather was James Little, and the grandfather on the maternal side was Henry Cunningham.

In politics, Mr. Lambert has always been an adherent of the Democratic party, but never an aspirant for public office. He attends religious worship at the Christian Church. In fraternal circles, he is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M. He and his wife are the objects of high regard throughout the community.

LANCASTER, William.—It has been the fortune of the Lancaster family to be identified with the agricultural development of Schuyler County for a period of eighty years. The founder of the name in this part of Illinois was Thomas T. Lancaster, a native of Kentucky, who in 1828 left the home of his boyhood and came to Schuyler County, entering a claim on Section 12 of Browning Township. At that time he and William Robertson were the only two white men in all that region. Roving bands of Indians were wont to traverse the country on their annual hunting trips and frequently he met them in the woods. On one occasion, after his clothing had been worsted in an encounter with a wolf dog, the Indians offered him a pup to pay for damages done. In 1829 he was joined by a sister and three brothers, William, Henry and Hartzell, all of whom settled in Browning Township. After four years on Section 12 he moved to Section 10, where he remained for seventy-four years, until his death.

When the "Deep Snow" of 1830 came, Thomas T. Lancaster had been in Illinois for two years and had his rude cabin well stocked with provisions for the winter, but, like other pioneers, he suffered severe hardships before the storm abated. The snow began to fall on the 28th of December and the ground was covered to a depth of four feet on the level. Had it not been for an abundance of wild game, many of the settlers would have starved before spring. The pioneers depended upon game for a large share of their support and the necessities of the times made him a skilled hunter. By constant toil he transformed a wilderness into an improved farm, and the place upon which his youthful energy was spent afforded him a home for his declining years. When he was still a few months less than twenty-one years of age, he cast his first presidential vote for Andrew Jackson during the latter's first candidacy for the office. From that time he never wavered in support of the Democratic party, whose candidates he supported from Jackson to Bryan. For sixty-seven years he was a member of the Church of Christ, in which he was baptized by Rev. Beverly Curry. Possessing strong religious faith, he took pleasure in doing his duty as a church-member and for many years served as an elder in his congregation. A thoughtful student of the Bible, as long as his eyesight permitted he loved to read the precious promises of the Book, and he died in the full assurance of a happy home beyond the grave. He was born January 28, 1807, and had he been spared four days longer, he would have been ninety-nine years of age. Seventy-eight years of that period had been passed in Schuyler County, where he was one of the oldest residents at the time of his death. His last days were passed amid peace and plenty, surrounded by loyal children and affectionate grandchildren.

The marriage of Thomas T. Lancaster and Elizabeth Jackson, a native of Kentucky, was solemnized by Squire Isaac Lane, March 1, 1831. Their happy union was severed by the death of the wife in 1866. There sons and seven daughters had been born of their union, namely: Nancy, who married Samuel Burrows, a farmer in Rushville Township; Mary, widow of George Seward, and now living at the old homestead; Eneline, who married George Wood and was last heard from in the Indian Territory; Hannah, deceased wife of J. F. Skiles, of Browning, Ill.; Thomas J., a farmer in Industry Township, McDonough County, Ill.; Elizabeth, deceased wife of Leonard Sherrell; William, a farmer of Browning Township; Selina, Emma and Sarah, deceased.

The gentleman whose name introduces this article was born on Section 10, Browning Township, Schuyler County, April 6, 1844. In neighboring schools he received his education. During 1866 he married Miss Elizabeth Walton, a native of the same township as himself and daughter of a pioneer. After his marriage he rented the old homestead and, upon the death of his father, bought sixty acres of the estate. Here he has since made his home. Like his father, he ever has upheld the principles of the Democratic party, and, like him, also enjoys the esteem of acquaintances. Of his four children two died in infancy. Benjamin T., who was born at the old homestead, October 21, 1869, married Miss Wealthy Perkins, who died May 16, 1904. Two children blessed their union, namely: Harold, who died in infancy; and Clarice E., who was born July 9, 1898, and who resides with her father and grandfather on the old homestead originally pre-empted by her great-grandfather. The only daughter of William Lancaster is Mary, wife of David Royer and a native of Browning Township, born July 12, 1872. Mr. and Mrs. Royer and their children, Pauline and Lawrence, reside upon a farm in Browning Township. The Lancaster family have done much to assist in the growth of their township and county, and its members enjoy the highest regard of a large circle of friends.

LARASH, William Isaac, editor and proprietor of The Schuyler Citizen, established in 1856, and The Rushville Daily Citizen, has been more or less closely identified with newspaper work ever since the close of his school-days. He was born October 2, 1851, at Allentown, Pa., a son of Isaac and Esther Ann (Kildare) Larash. On the maternal side Mr. Larash comes of Revolutionary stock, his maternal grandfather, William Kildare, having served under General Washington. Isaac Larash, father of William Isaac, was born in February, 1823, at Upper Milford, Lehigh County, Pa. For a score of years he resided at Pekin, Tazewell County, Ill., to which place he moved, with his wife, in November, 1852. There he engaged in merchant tailoring, but later purchased a farm in Spring Lake Township, Tazewell County, where he still resides. He married Esther Ann Kildare, who has been deceased several years. She was born at Frankfort, Pa., near the city of Philadelphia. Both parents of Mr. Larash were fervent Methodists and family prayers were daily offered.

William Isaac Larash spent a happy boyhood on the home farm. He has always been fond of out-door sports and, when occasion offered, has indulged his fondness for hunting. After completing his school attendance at Pekin, he entered the printing office of W. W. Sellers, who conducted The Tazewell Republican, and served an apprenticeship of two years, in all that period losing but one-half day. From 1869 to 1870 Mr. Larash was in the West and, during this time, had an opportunity to hunt large game. He worked as an all round printer at Omaha and other Missouri River cities, and then returned to Illinois and soon after engaged in publishing the Peoria Evening Review, the enterprise being a co-operative company composed of four practical printers, with Robert J. Burdette and Jerry Cochran as editors. In March, 1875, Mr. Larash located in Rushville and in 1879 purchased and engaged in the publication of The Schuyler Citizen. Its founder was the late George W. Scripps. On June 1, 1895, Mr. Larash issued the first edition of The Rushville Daily Citizen, which has continued without interruption to the present time. For twenty-nine years he has been editor and proprietor of The Weekly Citizen and for thirteen years of The Daily Citizen, and thus is surely entitled to the name of one of the leading journalists of the State. In his newspaper work he has ever striven to uphold the right, especially in his own community, and his columns have been open to both sides of many controversies. Occasionally his attitude has been misunderstood, but this public criticism comes to every man who stands above his fellows. In 1902, Mr. Larash launched out into a scheme to extend the circulation of The Citizen by means of a guessing contest, offering, in the aggregate, property valued at $50,000, which included in the presents for the successful estimates on the State election, the Electric Light plant in the city of Rushville, and the large brick building known as the Woolen Mills building, besides town lots and $2,500 worth of other articles, including a piano worth $350.

In his political views, Mr. Larash has ever been an ardent Republican. He cast his first presidential vote for General Grant, and has never failed to give support to the same party in both State and National elections ever since. In 1903 he was appointed postmaster at Rushville. Mr. Larash is prominent in Masonry. He became a member of Rushville Lodge, No. 9, A. F. & A. M., passed and raised Master Mason in 1877, was elected Worshipful Master and served in that chair in 1902 and 1903. He is a member of Rushville Chapter, No. 184 Royal Arch Masons, and Rushville Commandery Knights Templar, No. 56. For fifteen years he served the latter branch as Prelate.

On March 21, 1878, in Littleton Township, Schuyler County, Mr. Larash was married to Emelia Ann Horney, who was born in Littleton Township, July 16, 1857, a daughter of the late Col. Leonidas and Jane Horney. Col. Horney was killed at the battle of Champion Hills, Miss., while in command of the Tenth Missouri Volunteer Infantry, on May 16, 1863. Mrs. Larash is a graduate of the Rushville High School in the class of 1876, the first class graduated after the establishment of the high school system, and subsequently became a public school teacher. To this marriage have been born three daughters and one son, namely: Leonidas Horney, born December 7, 1883; Elizabeth Lou, born November 17, 1886; Winnifred Lucile, born October 24, 1888; and Esther Jane, born January 10, 1895.

Mr. Larash has been a member of the Methodist Church ever since early childhood. In 1877 he united with this body at Rushville and served for many years as class leader and on the official board, and at present is Recording Secretary of the same. Noting personal attributes and tendencies, Mr. Larash is a lover of home and family surroundings. He has been a factor in molding public opinion on many questions in his section, but is of retiring disposition, never seeking for himself those places of prominence he gladly sees his friends occupy. He is a man of generous impulses, of hopeful spirit and takes a large measure of satisfaction in what he has been able to accomplish.

LASHBROOK, Samuel, of Schuyler County, Ill., where he resides on Section 2, Woodstock Township, besides being one of the most successful, well-to-do and favorably known farmers of the county, is one of the fast diminishing number of honored veterans of the Civil War. He was born in Orange County, Ind., March 7, 1844, a son of William and Rebecca (Taylor) Lashbrook, the father being a native of the State of Maryland and the mother of Indiana. The latter, of whom her son Samuel has but a faint recollection, died when he was four years of age. She was of English ancestry. John Lashbrook, the paternal grandfather, was born on the Atlantic coast. The great-grandfather on the paternal side was born in England, as was also the great-great-grandfather, who came to America about the time of the Revolutionary War. John Taylor, the maternal grandfather, was a soldier in the War of 1812. William and Rebecca Lashbrook, the parents of Samuel, reared a family of seven children, as follows: John Wesley, Mary, Samuel, Solomon, Elizabeth, Jeremiah and William H. The eldest son, John W., served during the Civil War as a member of Company H, Ninety-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and died in 1863 on a hospital boat at Memphis, Tenn.; Mary is the wife of William H. Kirby, of Beardstown, Ill.; Solomon carries on farming in the vicinity of the old homestead in Orange County, Ind.; Elizabeth was married to Frank Moore, a farmer living near French Lick, Ind.; Jeremiah is a builder and contractor located in Terre Haute, Ind.; and William H. is a farmer in Indiana, located near his father's former place in Orange County. Some time after the death of Rebecca (Taylor) Lashbrook, William Lashbrook was married a second time wedding Nancy M. Morene, of Sullivan County, Ind., and of this union, three children were born, namely: Hiram W., Terre Haute, Ind., where he has been a Methodist minister for twenty years; James W., a carpenter and builder, residing in Terre Haute, Ind., and Ellen, who lives in Texas, where she is the wife of C. H. Baxter, of Dallas. William Lashbrook died November 15, 1888, and Nancy M. Lashbrook lives in Terre Haute, Ind., making her home with her son, James W. The father in early life, learned the trade of a blacksmith, following this occupation, together with farming, and being so proficient in blacksmithing that no kind of repair work could be taken to his shop which was too difficult for him to undertake. For some years, when a comparatively young man, he taught school, and later, was a local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was one of the leading citizens of his locality. Warm in his impulses, he was generous to the needy, and liberal in his support of all charitable enterprises. His home was always open to the weary and distressed, and no one in trouble was ever turned away from his door. When the Civil War was raging, his house was the neighborhood headquarters for news from the field of combat, and being a good reader, he read aloud to those gathered to hear, the tidings from the front. By one and all he was familiarly known as "Uncle Will," and during those trying days, many who had sons, fathers or husbands fighting in defense of the Union, called on him for sympathy and advice. He was tenderly kind to the widows and orphans of those who were slain in battle or perished in the hospitals, and scores of people still remember him with deep gratitude and profound respect.

Samuel Lashbrook was reared on the farm, and received his education in the district schools. Remaining at home until 1862, he enlisted on December 24, of that year, being mustered into service at Indianapolis, Ind., as a private in Company F, Thirteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, his regiment going thence to Louisville, Ky., and from there to Nashville, Tenn., supplied only with infantry arms. For this reason it was sent back to Louisville to be properly armed, and after receiving Enfield rifles, etc., proceeded to Paducah, Ky.; Nashville, Tenn.; and Huntsville, Ala., returning in the fall of 1863 to Louisville, via Nashville, where the command was mounted and furnished with cavalry accouterments. After taking part in some guerrilla skirmishes, Mr. Lashbrook participated in the Battle of Franklin, marching on thence to Huntsville. In 1864 he was sent again to Nashville, and spent five weeks in Camp Edgefield, whence the Thirteenth Indiana was ordered to Chattanooga, but being cut off, went down the Tennessee River, thence to Vicksburg and to New Orleans, where it remained until spring. The regiment was engaged in the battle at Spanish Fort, being under fire for about ten hours, and afterwards was sent to Mobile, skirmishing on the march. Mr. Lashbrook has a lively remembrance of a feast of sweet potatoes and other relishable edibles, which the "boys" enjoyed after the Battle of Spanish Fort, the Rev. Mr. Kirby, who was visiting the camp of the Thirteenth, being present on the occasion. That night, the Thirteenth "went after" Gen. Kirby Smith, having a brisk skirmish with a portion of his command. The regiment was then sent to Greenville, Ala., where the cheering news was received of Lee's surrender to Grant, which caused great rejoicing among the men. From Greenville the regiment moved to Montgomery, Ala., skirmishing with the retreating enemy. At Montgomery, the command did garrison duty, Mr. Lashbrook being detailed as a messenger to Jackson, Miss., and thence to Vicksburg, where he was mustered out of service November 16, 1865, going then to Indianapolis, for his final discharge. Returning home he again turned his attention to farm work, continuing thus one year on the old home place. In 1867 he moved to French Lick, Ind., where he was engaged in carpenter work four years. About the year 1871, he went into a partnership in the undertaking business, the firm manufacturing coffins and cases for their trade. Selling out his interest in this concern in 1873, he moved to Schuyler County, Ill., and went to work on a farm for Overton Parks, in Section 11, Woodstock Township, moving into a log cabin and remaining on the place eighteen months. In 1874, he rented land from Hon. Perry Logsdon, which he occupied until 1880, when he bought 131 acres of unimproved land in the same section, known as the "old Cliff farm," and established himself in his own home. He built a basement barn, measuring 36 by 44 feet, and two sheds, afterwards erecting a fine, two-story frame residence, with a cellar 16 by 32 feet in dimensions. In 1895, he rented the Briggie farm, which he cultivated four years, and in 1900, purchased 179 acres in Section 2, Woodstock Township, on which he has since lived. On his first arrival in Woodstock Township, his cash capital was limited to 25 cents, and now, 300 acres of good and finely improved land in the township belong to him. Through indomitable resolution, unwavering persistence and sagacious management, he has become one of the most prosperous farmers in Schuyler County. Although confronted sometimes by adversity, he has overcome all obstacles and is now enjoying the well merited rewards of his arduous labors.

On April 16, 1866, Mr. Lashbrook was united in marriage with Nancy J. Wilson, a most excellent woman, who was born in Orange County, Ind., a daughter of William and Biddy (Johnson) Wilson, natives of Orange County. Mr. and Mrs. Lashbrook have reared eight children, as follows: William F., Andrew J., Mary Alice, Frederick, Melissa, Cora, Nettie and Earl. The eldest son, William F., lives on the home place; Andrew J., who is engaged in farming in Brown County, Ill., married Miss Annie Cooper; Mary A. is the wife of Cyrus Bell, a farmer in Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County; Melissa was married to Edward Flindt, whose parents were among the earliest settlers of Schuyler County; Cora became the wife of Loren Serroff, of Winfield, Kan.; Nettie was married to Oscar L. Lear, a farmer in Woodstock Township; and Earl lives with his parents. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Politically, Mr. Lashbrook has always acted with the Republican party, taking a good citizen's interest in public affairs, but never seeking the distinction of local office. Fraternally, he is a member of Col. Horney Post, No. 131, Grand Army of the Republic, of Rushville. He is a man of genial temperament and cordial manners, a most hospitable and interesting entertainer, and has a wide circle of acquaintances, among which he numbers hosts of friends.

LASHMETT, Andrew J., the subject of this sketch, was born on a farm in Schuyler County, Ill., in 1864. His father, John Lashmett, was a native of the Old Dominion, and the birth of his mother, Lucretia (Rucker) Lashmett, occurred near Lexington, Ky. The paternal grandparents, both of whom were French by nativity, settled in Virginia shortly after the beginning of the last century, and were closely identified with the early development of that State.

Mr. Lashmett received his early education in the district schools of Schuyler County, taking advantage of the limited opportunities which he had for improving his mind until he was compelled to give up his studies in order to earn a competence for himself. In 1891, he came to Rushville, and established a musical instrument business, which he conducted successfully for a period of four years. He then accepted a position with a large music house located at Burlington, Ia., for which he traveled two years, his reputation as a musician, together with his business qualifications, making him a valuable salesman in this line. Afterwards, he returned to Rushville and established the concern which he is now conducting. For the past ten years he has occupied the large store building on East Washington Street, near the northeast corner of the Public Square, where he has successfully carried on the department store, familiarly known as "Little Chicago." His business has so increased that he has been compelled from time to time to add new lines to his stock, and this, as a matter of course, necessitated new additions to his store building, until today he occupies over 15,000 square feet of floor space. His stock consists of the following complete lines: furniture, undertaking goods, pianos, organs, vehicles (including wagons, surreys, buggies, stanhopes and runabouts), harness, saddles, robes, blankets and whips, stoves and ranges, carpets and rugs, matting, window-shades and curtains, sewing machines, etc., etc.

Mr. Lashmett is a musician of more than local reputation, his execution upon the violin having attracted special attention. Having a deep interest in music, he devotes special attention to this musical instrument department. In this stock are included pianos, organs, phonographs and a large assortment of other musical instruments. Such is the demand for these that some of the best makes are here represented. Among the pianos, Mr. Lashmett favors the Emerson as a leader, but carries also in stock the Lakeside, Schuman and Schiller pianos. He has done much to stimulate an interest in high grade music in this section. The variety and reliability of the instruments handled by him have satisfied a demand equal to that in the larger cities. One room of this large establishment is devoted to the needs of musicians, and has proved a popular meeting place for those of the city who are musically inclined. In all other lines carried by Mr. Lashmett, the best is always to be found. His close application to business, together with his thorough knowledge of its details, assures his patrons of fair treatment, good values and honest dealings.

Notwithstanding his absorbing business responsibilities, Mr. Lashmett has always taken a deep interest in the social and civic welfare of the community. He has been prominent in local politics and has served the city and county in various capacities. By virtue of his excellent service in connection with the public trusts committed to his care, he has reflected signal credit upon himself, as well as upon the party he represents. He has served as Alderman of the Second Ward, and in the spring of 1902 was elected Supervisor of Rushville Township, being re-elected in 1904. In the spring of 1907 he was elected to the office of Mayor of the City of Rushville.

Mr. Lashmett belongs to that class of men that have attained success solely through their individual effort. His rise in the business world may be attributed, for the most part, to his resolute purpose to give the public the best of which he was capable. In his association with the commercial and political affairs of Rushville, he has proved himself to be a public spirited and enterprising citizen. By reason of his honesty, integrity and ability, he is recognized as one of the most reliable and substantial men of the city, and well does he deserve this distinction.

On January 15, 1902, Mr. Lashmett was united in marriage with Rosa Cowan, a native of Virden, Ill., and one son has been born to them, James Andrew, a most interesting and promising child.

LAWLER, Charles E.—Among the leading farmers of Schuyler County, Ill., who have largely assisted to impart to the agricultural interests of that region the tone and prestige which they admittedly possess, and whose enterprise and public spirit have won for him an individual standing second to none in his locality, is the gentleman whose name introduces this personal record. Mr. Lawler was born in Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County, September 26, 1851. His father, George E. Lawler, was a Virginian, having been born in that State December 30, 1817, while his mother, Caroline (Hymer) Lawler, was a native of North Carolina. The paternal grandfather followed farming in the Old Dominion, and when quite young, George E. Lawler accompanied his parents to Ohio, whence at an early period the family journeyed to Illinois, locating in Woodstock Township, Schuyler County. Subsequently, George E. Lawler settled in Bainbridge Township in the same county, where he carried on farming during the remainder of his active life. He died in 1898. A detailed narrative of his career, together with particulars in regard to his wife and family, will be found in an adjacent section of this work.

In boyhood, Charles E. Lawler attended the district schools of Bainbridge Township, and passed his early youth on his father's farm. On reaching manhood he commenced farming for himself, and continued in this occupation with invariable success until the time of his abandonment of agricultural pursuits in 1903, when he established his residence in Rushville, Ill., in order to secure better educational facilities for his children. He has since lived in retirement, having a very attractive home on East Adams Street.

Mr. Lawler has been twice married. His first marriage occurred at Rushville, in 1873, when he was wedded to Maria Greer, a daughter of James L. and Martha (Wilson) Greer, who was born in Rushville Township in 1853. Two sons resulted from this union,—Clyde E. and William R. The elder of these, while exhibiting a fine horse at a local county fair in 1898, was kicked by the animal, and died from the injury thus received. William R., the younger son, is a graduate of the Normal School, and also completed a course of commercial study. In 1886, his first wife having passed away, Mr. Lawler was joined in matrimony with Nora Kirkham, a daughter of Silas and Mary (Garrett) Kirkham, who was born in Kansas in 1858. The issue of the second marriage was three children, namely: Orrin H., Mildred and Frances. The first named, having finished his preparatory course by graduating in 1905, is now a student in the Illinois State University, being a member of the class graduating in 1909. On his removal to Rushville, Mr. Lawler turned over the management of his farm of 165 acres to his son, William R., who keeps a fine grade of horses, cattle and hogs, especial attention being given to Shire horses. In politics, Mr. Lawler is allied with the Democratic party, and has served the public as Township Assessor. He is one of the most prominent citizens of Rushville, and for many years has been closely identified with the agricultural interests of Schuyler County.

LAWLER, George Edward (deceased).—Among the worthy pioneer settlers of Schuyler County, Ill., upon whose resolute minds and sturdy bodies rested the herculean task of developing a wilderness into a civilized community, none is entitled to a greater meed of praise than George Edward Lawler. To ascribe to him and his contemporaries the credit which is justly their due, to recount their arduous labors, depict their noble traits of character, and perpetuate in enduring form the record of their achievements, is a grateful task for those of a succeeding generation, who are the fortunate beneficiaries of the great work accomplished by them. In the ranks of these honored pioneers, George E. Lawler, is one of the foremost, as typifying all those qualities that enter into the composition of perfect manhood. Mr. Lawler was a native of the "Old Dominion," where his birth occurred in Fauquier County December 30, 1817. He was a son of Alexander and Margaret B. (White) Lawler, the father having been born in Warrington, Fauquier County, Va., in 1794, and the mother also in Virginia in 1793.

Alexander Lawler was of Irish descent, his ancestors coming to America in the colonial period. His wife was of Swiss descent. The former died in 1853, the latter surviving him until 1874, when she passed away at the age of 76 years. Grandfather James Lawler was private secretary of General Washington, serving in that capacity during the Revolutionary War, in which he took part in many of the most sanguinary battles. After the termination of that memorable conflict, he returned to his home, and resumed his occupation of farming and surveying. He surveyed and platted the farm and home grounds of General Washington, at Mount Vernon.

He was considered as one of the best educated and most polished gentlemen of his day. George E. Lawler was brought to Schuyler County, in 1839, by his parents, who settled in Bainbridge Township, on a farm which is still in possession of the family. He remained on the home place until the time of his marriage, which took place in 1841. The wife of Mr. Lawler, who died June 27, 1879, was formerly Caroline Hymer, a daughter of John Hymer, one of the most esteemed of the early settlers of Schuyler County. Mr. Lawler then bought his first property, sixteen acres of land, and built a log cabin, at that period the best one in his section of the country. He had the first cook-stove and carpet in use in that locality. His family ultimately consisted of eleven children, nearly all of whom were reared to maturity. Their names are as follows: Sarah Margaret, wife of Jacob Hammond, a narrative of whose career appears in this volume; George W., who is engaged in the grocery business at Rushville, Ill.; Zerilda J., married Samuel Wheelhouse, of Rushville; John W., a retired farmer and merchant, whose life is also portrayed in this work; Josephine, wife of A. B. Lawler, a farmer located near Rushville; James A., who operates a grist mill at Rushville; Charles E., a retired farmer, residing at Rushville; Henry, who died in 1864, at the age of eight years; Oliver F., who occupies the old homestead farm in Bainbridge Township; Ernest J., who died in March, 1865, when five years old; and Dwight E., a merchant at Riverdale, Kan. The father of this family was long one of the leading farmers and citizens of Schuyler County. Beginning with sixteen acres of land, he gradually increased his possessions until he became one of the most extensive landholders in the county, owning at one time 803 acres. As the children grew to years of maturity, he gave each a goodly portion to start them in active life, providing liberally for all, after equipping them with a thorough education. He was extremely public-spirited, and unselfishly active in promoting the best interests of the community. He was always ready to extend a helping hand to the needy who deserved assistance, bestowing his charities without ostentation, and the number of those whom he has succored when in temporary straits, and who owe their subsequent success to his broad minded philanthropy, will never be fully known. He was a member of the Baptist Church, and his wife belonged to the Methodist denomination. Mr. Lawler died August 24, 1898. His memory will long be cherished for the shining virtues of his character and for his beneficent deeds.

LAWLER, John W., one of the most substantial and favorably known citizens of Rushville, Ill., was born in Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County, October 4, 1845, a son of George E. and Caroline (Hymen) Lawler, his father having been born in Virginia, December 30, 1818, and the mother born in North Carolina. George E. Lawler followed farming for a livelihood. He went with his parents from Virginia to Ohio at an early period, and during the thirties accompanied them thence to Illinois, the family settling in Woodstock Township, Schuyler County. At a later period George E. Lawler located on a farm in Bainbridge Township, on which he built a dwelling and followed farming until 1873, when he retired from active pursuits, establishing his home in Rushville, where he died in 1896.

John W. Lawler enjoyed the benefits of attendance at the district schools of Bainbridge Township when a boy, and throughout his youth busied himself by assisting his father in the daily routine of farmwork. On attaining his majority he engaged in farming for himself, and continued thus until 1869. At that time he secured employment in a general store, where he remained a few years. He then resumed farming operations, which he afterward again relinquished and made a trip to the West. Returning home he once more applied himself to farming, and was thus employed until 1884, when he embarked in the grocery trade in Rushville, selling out in 1906 and withdrawing from active life.

Mr. Lawler has thrice entered into matrimonial relations. His first marriage took place in Rushville in 1875, when he wedded Rosie Patterson, who died in 1883. Four boys and two girls were the issue of this union, namely: Clarence, who died at the age of four years; Marvin, who married Tillie Ellis, and has one son, Lawrence, living in Beardstown, Ill., and employed as a conductor on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad; Ray, also a railway conductor, running out of Denver, Colo.; Carroll, of Rushville, who married Mary Walker, of the same place; Grace, wife of Frank Ross, of Galesburg, Ill.; and Bessie, wife of Guy Patterson, who has two children.

In 1899, at Peoria, Ill., Mr. Lawler married Emma Reffin, who died in 1890. In February, 1892, at Rushville, he was united in marriage with Emma M. Harmon, who was born in the vicinity of Rushville in 1865. The offspring of the last marriage is one son, John J., living at home. In politics, Mr. Lawler is a Democrat. He is a man of excellent character, and enjoys the respect and confidence of a large acquaintance.

LAWLER, Oliver T.—One of the most interesting and valuable landmarks in Bainbridge Township is that owned and occupied by Oliver T. Lawler, son of the pioneer, George Edward Lawler. Around this old place are centered the manifold happenings of almost three-quarters of a century; the birth of a large family of children, their development from youth to manhood and womanhood, their departure upon their respective independent walks of life, and the return of Oliver T. as manager and eventual owner of the memory laden homestead. Upon this farm Oliver T. was born August 24, 1858, and here began the tasks which fitted him for his large responsibility as a representative farmer and stock-raiser of the twentieth century. His opportunities were similar to those of the other lads of his neighborhood, and included attendance at the district schools during the winter months, and work in the fields during the summer. After the removal of the father to Rushville in 1873, he augmented his previous training by graduating at the high-school of that town, and October, 1879, was united in marriage to Mary C. Morris, daughter of John W. Morris, a sketch of whose career may be found on another page of this work.

In the spring of 1880, Mr. Lawler brought his young wife to the farm upon which he was born, and which he rented until 1898. He then bought the place outright, and now owns the 320 acres, all of which is under a high state of cultivation. Mr. Lawler breeds, feeds and ships considerable stock, and engages in general farming on a large scale. His residence, barns, outbuildings, fences, drainage and general improvements indicate thoroughness, method, and fine regard for the æsthetic as well as financial side of existence, and taken all in all the property constitutes one of the most delightful homes and profitable agricultural enterprises in Schuyler County. The owner is a man of firm but progressive ideas, a conscientious student of the best ways of farming and the most enlightened ways of living, and the possessor of practical and common sense ideas upon subjects engaging the popular attention.

Mr. and Mrs. Lawler have had eight children, three of whom died in infancy. Of those living, Lou M. was born November 2, 1888; Dorothy G., was born September 6, 1891; Florence C., was born May 20, 1893; Bernice was born April 19, 1897; and Ernest was born August 20, 1902. In politics Mr. Lawler is a Democrat, but in local matters he is broad enough to sometimes recognize the limitations of the Democratic ticket. He enjoys social prominence in marked degree, is popular with all classes, and is an honored member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

LAWLER, Robert A.—The advantage of honest business principles, unswerving devotion to the best tenets of a necessary and important occupation, and appreciation of the courtesy, consideration and tactfulness which unfliningly amplifies and dignifies human endeavor, are factors emphasized in the enterprise of J. W. Lickey & Company, funeral directors of the city of Rushville. This firm has been in existence since 1898, and in 1902 its working force was augmented by Robert A. Lawler, to whose far sightedness, progression and unremitting industry and good judgment is due a large share of its merited success.

Robert Alexander Lawler was born on a farm in Woodstock Township, Schuyler County, Ill., December 22, 1877, and is the youngest of the four sons and one daughter of Washington M. and Lilly (Burnside) Lawler, the former of whom was an early settler, and the latter a native of Schuyler County. Washington M. Lawler, who in early life was a farmer and cooper and, in later life, a farmer, is given attention elsewhere in this work. He settled on the farm where his son was born in 1840, and from small beginnings arose to wealth and influence, owning, at the time of his death, November 5, 1897, 240 acres of improved land. His wife survived him until February 15, 1907. Of their children, Theodore W. is a farmer of Warren County, Ill.; Alice is the wife of Eugene Chamberlain, of Bainbridge Township; Thomas H. lives in Kewanee, Ill.; and Fred H. is a traveling salesman. The elder Lawler was a prominent and public spirited man, greatly interested in the roads and schools of the township, and though of a quiet, unostentatious nature, the soul of friendliness and good humor.

As did his brothers and sister, Robert A. Lawler attended the district school in early youth, and in 1898 entered the Rushville Normal Business College, from which he was duly graduated in 1900. For two years he combined oversight of the home farm with school-teaching, that well worn thoroughfare from country to city life, and in so doing laid aside the small competence which was to constitute his financial start in life. August 28, 1902, he was united in marriage to Myrtle Lickey, daughter of J. W. Lickey, of Rushville, and immediately afterward became the business associate of his well known father-in-law. In the meantime he has advanced to a foremost place in his profession, has made a thorough scientific study of embalming, and has been granted license No. 929 by the State Board of Embalmers. He takes a keen and unflinching interest in his work, invests it with forethought and intelligence, and by his tact and understanding, diverts from the necessarily greswome occupation much that is objectionable and depressing. The firm occupy two floors of an establishment on the northeast corner of the square, and their equipment is in accord with the most modern and progressive funeral directing and embalming methods. The confidence of the public has been gained by skillful and dependable service, and the exercise of those personal niceties and considerations which appeal to these who have sustained the loss of their near and dear ones. In connection with their line of caskets and general funeral furnishings, the firm carry a stock of mouldings, frames and art goods. Mr. Lawler is Secretary of the National Co-operative Burial Association, which has a membership of eighteen hundred.

To train and succeed to his business Mr. Lawler has two sons, Harold and Eugene. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, in which both himself and his wife are very active, and, fraternally, is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Friendship Lodge No. 24, of which he is Noble Grand, and is a member and presiding officer of the Mystic Workers No. 474, his wife having been Secretary of the same for the past five years. Mrs. Lawler also is a member of the Rebekas, as is her husband, and he is connected as well with the Modern Woodmen of America and Knights and Ladies of Security. From a business and social standpoint Mr. Lawler is one of the prominent and successful men in his part of the State, and enjoys a wide acquaintance with many of its foremost families.

LAWLER, Robert E., an enterprising and progressive young farmer whose home is in Section 22, Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County, Ill., and who is one of the leading citizens of his locality, was born on the farm where he now lives, January 18, 1880, a son of John Hugh and Mary (O'Connor) Lawler, natives of Fauquier County, Va., whence the former was brought to Schuyler County, Ill., by his father, James W. Lawler, in 1835, when he was about eleven years old. James W. Lawler was one of the earliest settlers of Bainbridge Township. Here John H. Lawler married a Miss Edmondson, and by her had two children, both of whom died in infancy. After the mother's death he married Almira Perry, and their union resulted in four children, namely: Albert, who died at the age of twenty-two years; William, who died in 1899; Nancy, wife of Edward Hood, and Ann Elizabeth, wife of James Self, both husbands being farmers in Bainbridge Township. The mother of this family died in Bainbridge Township, and John H. Lawler subsequently married Mary O'Connor, born near Lyons, France, who was brought by her parents to this country when she was about six years old. Her father, Mathias O'Connor, settled in Camden Township, Schuyler County, where he died in 1880. John H. and Mary (O'Connor) Lawler were the parents of six children, as follows: Clinton, who died in infancy; Jessie L., deceased wife of Jona Vaughan, who died in 1898; Martha K. and Lucy D., of Rushville, Ill.; and Robert E., to whom this personal record pertains. John H. Lawler departed this life March 2, 1894, his widow surviving him until July 2, 1897, when she, too, passed away. When the former first came to Schuyler County, wild game was abundant, and deer trails were visible in all directions. The land in Bainbridge Township where the Lawlers made their home, was heavily covered with white and black-oak timber. James W. and John H. Lawler cleared this wilderness, and on ground then haunted by straggling Indians, whose wigwags had scarce disappeared, now stand churches, schoolhouses and beautiful homes, to perpetuate the memory of the sturdy pioneer of the Lawler family.

Robert E. Lawler was fourteen years old when his father died, and passed his boyhood in assisting in work on the home place and attending the district schools. After finishing his education in the Rushville Normal School he taught for two years, and then turned his attention to the farm containing 350 acres, which was left to his care, burdened with an indebtedness to be discharged. Well has he performed his task, and he and his sisters have become the owners of 210 acres of the homestead property.

On April 13, 1903, Mr. Lawler was united in marriage with Grace E. Hood, who was born in Cass County, Ill., a daughter of Edward Hood, a prominent farmer of Bainbridge Township. Mr. and Mrs. Lawler have two children, namely: John D., born May 2, 1904; and Mary Lucille, born August 2, 1906.

In politics, Mr. Lawler is a Democrat, and has taken an active part in the political affairs of his township, in which he has become an influential factor. In 1906, during Mr. Lawler's absence from home, the Democratic Township Convention nominated him for the office of Supervisor, and he was elected by a decisive majority, being eight years the junior of the next youngest member of the Board of Supervisors. He is looked upon as one of the most prominent citizens of the community, and he and his amiable wife have a host of friends.

LAWSON, James P.—To the average farmer in Illinois horticulture, as a science, is a closed book, the study of which seems hardly justified by the results thus far achieved in the Central West in connection with the fruit-raising industry. Yet one has but to scan the work of certain handsmen whose attention has thus been directed with successful results, to realize the injustice of the opinion commonly held. One of the most interesting and informing expressions of this sort of nature-loving spirit to be found in Schuyler County, is the farm in Section 16, Camden Township, owned and occupied by James P. Lawson. The man bent upon horticultural or agricultural success might travel far and not find so encouraging an exposition of what may be accomplished in fruit-raising when backed by enthusiasm, broad understanding and untiring industry.

James P. Lawson was born in Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County, July 6, 1851, a son of Robert Lawson, and in boyhood removed with his parents to Camden Township, where the family settled on a farm now owned by his brother William. Here the subject of this sketch attended the public schools as opportunity offered, and upon attaining his majority, began work on his own account, though still making his home with his mother who, by this time, had become a widow. Industrious and frugal in his habits, he had no difficulty in securing employment, and having few and simple wants, was able to lay aside a portion of his earnings for future investments. His mother in the meantime having passed away, on March 17, 1889, he was married to Miss Hester Marlow, a daughter of Levi S. and Margaretta (Rice) Marlow, and a native of Camden Township. A sketch of Mr. Marlow will be found in its proper place in another part of this work.

After his marriage, Mr. Lawson resided on the old home farm for one year, when he removed to Camden, remaining there for about five years. In 1896 he bought ninety acres of the paternal farm, to which he later added by purchase eighty acres more on Section 16, making a total of 170 acres, of which twenty acres is in Section 9 in Camden Township. This property he has improved by the erection of farm buildings, setting out orchards and a variety of small fruit-bearing shrubs, besides developing a vegetable growing department that will add materially to the production of the farm.

Mr. and Mrs. Lawson have had two children, one son, Vernie, who has received a good education and is now assisting his father in the supervision of the farm, and one daughter, Gracie, who died as the result of injuries received by being accidentally scalded, although she lingered for a week after the accident—a calamity which left a pall of gloom upon the family, depriving them of the society of a bright child who was a source of happiness to the household. Mr. Lawson is a Democrat in politics, while Mrs. Lawson is a member of the M. P. L. and Star Lodge of Camden, their son, Vernie being identified with the A. F. & A. M. and M. W. A.

LAWSON, Joseph Robert.—An interesting and instructive demonstration of scientific agriculture and horticulture is presented on the beautiful farm of Joseph Robert Lawson, in Section 22, Camden Township. Eighty-two acres in extent, this farm represents the acme of comfort and utility, and makes strong appeal to the artistic, refined and home-loving nature of the man who has presided over its developing fortunes for the past twenty-three years. Hither he came as a renter in 1884, two years later purchasing the property from its owner, Drew Dawes, and thereupon instituting a systematic renovating of its facilities, which were sadly in need of repair. There was much timber to be cleared away, fences to be renewed and buildings to be repaired, in the meantime there being erected upon it the modern two-and-a-half story house, which compares favorably with the best in the county, besides capacious barns and out-houses, and many other general improvements to which the average, plodding farmer, is a total stranger. While engaging to some extent in general farming, Mr. Lawson's greatest pride and pleasure is his fruit, to the raising of which he has devoted a large share of his time, and has made exhaustive research among recognized authorities. He has set out strawberries, raspberries, currants, grapes, apples, plums, pears, and practically all of the fruits which flourish in Illinois, besides introducing a variety of desirable vegetables for the early market. An additional resource is blooded English Berkshire hogs, English horses and Short-horn cattle, also a variety of fowl, which here attain to rare breeding.

Born in Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County, Ill., February 6, 1856, Mr. Lawson is a son of Robert and Mary (Moore) Lawson, who were born in Hamptonshire, England, and settled in Schuyler County at a date which has not been attainable by the writer of this sketch. Joseph was educated in the public schools and remained at home until his eighteenth year, when he went to work by the month for a farmer living near Peoria, his services netting him $22.00 per month. In 1874 he returned to his father's farm, and the following year went to work at the blacksmith trade for William Cody, with whom he remained four years. In 1879, on account of the death of his father, he returned to the old homestead, this time remaining until 1882, when he rented the Melvin farm, north of Camden, for two years, thereafter locating on his present farm in Section 22, Camden Township. He never has lost track entirely of the blacksmith trade, and during the winter season the blows of his hammer resound from the anvil, while his summers are entirely devoted to the general duties of the farm. At first he was obliged to incur indebtedness on his farm, but this long since has been cancelled, and a comfortable balance is increasing for his declining years.

The marriage of Mr. Lawson and a daughter of William Wightman mentioned elsewhere in this sketch, occurred August 21, 1880, and of the union there are four children, of whom Walter Whitson, a farmer in Bainbridge Township, married Maggie Lashbrook, and has three children: Wayne, Pauline and Allen; Curry Delbert, Guy and William are living on the farm with their parents. Mr. Lawson is a Democrat in politics but never has been active in local party affairs. He is a firm believer in churches, charities and social organizations, and while contributing generously towards their financial support, has thus far not seen his way clear to tender his personal association.

He has been a resident of Schuyler County fifty-two years, has grown from boy to manhood within sight of many who still make Camden Township their home, and it is safe to say that no man whose home has been in the same township forty-six years, has a larger claim upon the confidence and friendliness of the people of Camden.

LEARY, Jeremiah R.—An important factor in the management of public institutions in Schuyler County is Jeremiah R. Leary, Superintendent of the Alms House for the past four years, and formerly one of the extensive and successful farmers and stock-raisers of Buena Vista Township. Mr. Leary swells the large percentage of men of Irish parentage who maintain high standards of work and character in this county, and he is eminently fitted by natural ability and experience for his present humane and widely influential position. Born in Hancock County, Ill., January 21, 1857, he is a son of Timothy and Julia (Haggerty) Leary, both of whom came to America from Ireland in the same sailing vessel, and who later were married in Columbus, Ohio, which remained their home for some years. About 1849, they located on a farm in Hancock County, Ill., where Mr. Leary assisted in the construction of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, continuing thus until the road had been completed between Quincy and Galesburg, Ill. About 1866, he came to Schuyler County and rented land in Buena Vista Township, later purchasing forty acres, and operating an additional 120 acres, until his death, May 29, 1895. His wife survived him but a few months, her death occurring January 7, 1896. Mr. Leary was a Democrat in politics, giving that party supreme allegiance from the time of his arrival in the county. In religion he was a devout Catholic. Of his eight children, three sons only are living: John, a barber in Rushville; James, assistant superintendent of the Alms House; and Jeremiah R.

Jeremiah R. Leary acquired the rudiments of his education in what was known as the old Taylor School, of Woodstock Township, and he was early taught to make himself useful upon the home farm. In 1878 he had saved sufficient money to enable him to purchase a forty acre tract in Section 6, Buena Vista Township, to which he added forty acres, the entire tract having no improvements upon it and a large part of it being covered with timber and underbrush. Eventually his industry created a fine and valuable farm, having modern buildings, fences and machinery, and upon disposing of it in 1892 he realized a profit of twenty-four dollars per acre over the purchase price. He next bought 116 acres in Section 8, the same township, adding to this until he owned 134 acres, which, in turn, he converted into a profitable farm and beautiful home. In January, 1904, he disposed of this property also, determined to enter upon some less arduous means of livelihood.

March 1, 1904, Mr. Leary was appointed Superintendent of the Alms House by the Board of Supervisors of Schuyler County, and since has managed the home and farm of 310 acres. His administration has met with general approval, and has been the means of vastly improving the output and general advantages of the farm. At the present time there are on the place about eighty-one head of cattle and sixty head of hogs, and each year he has raised on an average two colts and eighteen calves. About fifty acres of the farm are under corn each year, and this amount has been sufficient for all feeding purposes. During the past three years the wheat yield has been 600 bushels. The general atmosphere of the place is kindly and homelike, although idleness is never encouraged or permitted when the inmates are able to make themselves useful. One is impressed with the absolute cleanliness which prevails in house and field, and with the strictly enforced sanitary observances. The financial affairs of the institution are in every way satisfactory, economy and thrift being the keynote of the present management.

Like his father before him, Mr. Leary is a Democrat, and was a member of the Board of Supervisors of Buena Vista Township during 1889-91. In religion he is a Catholic.

On January 25, 1893, Mr. Leary was united in marriage to Martha E. Hare, who was a native of Schuyler County, born June 15, 1870, and for several years previous to her marriage, a successful teacher in the public schools. After marriage they began housekeeping on a farm Mr. Leary had purchased the year previous, and in the neighborhood of their parents they lived until they sold their farm and Mr. Leary was appointed Superintendent of the County Farm March 1, 1904. Mr. and Mrs. Leary have one son, James Harold Leary, born January 21, 1900.

LEWIS, Isaac.—Men who are wont to declaim upon their scant opportunities, the vicissitudes of even the most fortunate life or the slow rewards of practical industry, should take heart from the experience of Isaac Lewis, than whom no citizen of Schuyler County has been handicapped in greater degree in his struggle for a recompense. Nevertheless, great usefulness has come out of his adversities, political and social prominence has followed in the wake of his keen mentality and philosophical acceptance of fate, and many friends brighten his life with their appreciation and good will. This well known resident of Rushville was born on a farm in Woodstock Township, Schuyler County, Ill., July 9, 1865, a son of John R. and Martha (Kennedy) Lewis, the former born in Alabama, and the latter in Ohio. John R. Lewis came from Alabama to Brown County, Ill., in the early days of State history and finally settled in Woodstock Township, which then was very sparsely populated. Here he cleared his land, engaged in farming for the balance of his active life, and died on the farm which represented the best industry of his life, in 1901, at the age of eighty years.

The district school of Woodstock Township and the Rushville Normal School contributed to the education of Isaac Lewis. Then, as now, he was an earnest student, and possessed an inquiring and adaptive mind. He early was trained to the practical side of farming, and it was while cutting clover for seed at the age of twenty that his team ran away, and through contact with the machinery he lost both of his hands. A less sturdy heart would have been crushed by a disaster of this kind, but Mr. Lewis looked on the bright side of his affliction, and resolved that so material a catastrophe should not blight his capacity for usefulness in other directions. Natural resource has overcome almost all obstacles in connection with his mishap, and he has filled many positions of trust and responsibility requiring manual as well as mental skill.

The pleasing personality and fine traits of Mr. Lewis won him a wife who has materially promoted his happiness and success, and who has been an invaluable aid to him in the transaction of his general and political business. Mrs. Lewis formerly was Miss Della Chitwood, daughter of W. E. and Elizabeth (Stutsman) Chitwood, the former born in Bainbridge Township, and the latter in Woodstock Township, Schuyler County, Ill., and who have always been well and favorably known residents of Schuyler County. Carefully reared and practically educated, she is a woman of good sense and refinement. Early in life she entered the profession of school teaching and continued in that line with much success, up to the time of assuming her duties as deputy in the office of the County Clerk, in connection with her husband, in which she is at present engaged.

Mr. Lewis has voted the Democratic ticket ever since attaining his majority, and as a political servant of the people has found an important and influential field of activity. He was for eight years Assessor of Woodstock Township, and now is finishing his third term as County Clerk, having been elected to that office first in 1898. His last election was November 6, 1906, when a gratifying majority testified to their appreciation of his integrity and ability by giving him their vote. In fraternal circles he enjoys enviable popularity, and is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Willard Encampment, Knights of Pythias and Rebekas. In religion he is a Presbyterian.

LICKEY, John Wesley.—The successful funeral director of the first years of the twentieth century is a long way removed from his prototype of even a decade ago. While members of the profession can seemingly never attain the results achieved by the Egyptians, whose art was inspired by their belief in bodily as well as spiritual immortality, science more and more is coming to the aid of the present generation of embalmers, creating out of what formerly was crude and repellant, an art and science combined. Representatives of this latter-day advancement is the business of J. W. Lickey & Company, of Rushville, who, in connection with the conducting of funerals, embalming, and supplying caskets and other burial paraphernalia, carry a varied stock of art goods, and mouldings.

John Wesley Lickey, establisher of the present firm, was born in Tuscarawas County, Ohio, December 8, 1852, and is a son of Wilson and Hannah (Hill) Lickey, natives also of Ohio.

Mr. Lickey is named for his grand-fathers, John Lickey and Wesley Hill, the former of whom was born and spent his entire life in Ohio, while the latter came at an early day to Illinois, locating in the vicinity of Brooklyn. In 1849 Mr. Hill went to Pike's Peak, Colo., to engage in gold mining, and while there his wife died, a fact which rendered his home-coming inexpressibly sad. He survived for several years, however, his death finally occurring in Warren County, Ill. Wilson Lickey came to the vicinity of Brooklyn, Ill., in 1855, when John Wesley was three years old, and in 1861 removed to Vermont Township, Fulton County, where he followed general farming and stock-raising until 1867. He then bought the Schenk farm near Brooklyn, Schuyler County, and died there in 1896, leaving to the wife who survives him, and who still occupies the old place, a splendidly improved and valuable property. Wilson Lickey and wife had seven children, one of whom died in infancy. The oldest son, James William, lives on the old place; Newton and Abraham (twins) have farms adjoining the old homestead in Brooklyn Township; Jane is the wife of Leroy Swift, a farmer of McDonough County, Ill.; and Emma lives at home with her mother. Mr. Lickey was a quiet, unpretentious man, a Republican in politics, and a member of the Presbyterian Church. He led a well balanced and industrious life, and was highly respected by all who knew him.

The oldest in his father's family, John Wesley Lickey, early assumed prominent responsibility upon the home farm, and largely through the application of his leisure to studious pursuits, acquired a liberal and practical education. March 30, 1878, he married Mary M. Arick, step-daughter of William Loring. Mrs. Lickey was also born in Ohio, and lost her father, Henry Arick, in the Civil War, he having enlisted in an Ohio regiment, and through exposure while waiting on the sick contracted the illness which proved fatal. Mrs. Lickey came to Illinois with her mother who subsequently became the wife of William Loring. She received an excellent education in the district and normal schools of Rushville, and after completing her training, was for several years one of the popular and successful educators of Schuyler County. Mr. and Mrs. Lickey began house-keeping in Brooklyn Township, and at the end of five years, having sold their farm located in Rushville, where Mr. Lickey followed his early trade of carpentering and building until about 1888. He then engaged in the grain and elevator business with J. B. Stewart & Company, and in 1892 removed to Industry, and engaged in the furniture and undertaking business. So successful was he in this line of activity that, in 1896, he sold out his business in order to move to a larger city, and in 1898 he purchased the stock of the People's Furniture Company, operating the business under the firm name of Lickey & Reece. Mr. Reece was a graduate embalmer, and at the time of his death, May 4, 1901, was greatly missed as one of the best exponents of his occupation in Schuyler County. The firm then was changed to J. W. Lickey & Company, the junior partner being Robert A. Lawler, son-in-law of Mr. Lickey, and husband of his only child, Myrtle Lickey. Mrs. Lickey also is a practical embalmer, and has been of great assistance to her husband in promoting his business. Mr. Lickey is a member of the Embalmers State Association, and stands in the first rank of those who follow his necessary calling. He has a finely equipped establishment, and his patronage is recruited from all parts of the township and county. He is a believer in honest methods and fair representation, and has won out solely through his grit and determination, and rare common sense. Socially he is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Mystic Workers, Rebekas, and Modern Woodmen of America. Mrs. Lickey is also a member of the Rebekas, and both are connected with the Presbyterian Church.

LITTLE, George.—Born February 9, 1808; died March 5, 1896. Of the early settlers who came to Schuyler County in its formative period, there were few indeed who exerted a more potent force in the commercial life of the community than did George Little. His life was an illustration of the masterful control of early limitations, such as was the lot of the pioneer settlers, and the wise utilization of ordinary opportunities that were available to the many, but grasped by few. For more than fifty years his career was identified with the business interests of Rushville, and his name will long be remembered after the present generation has passed away. Mr. Little was accompanied by his parents and became one of the builders of Rushville, and lived to see the city achieve its modern improvements in which he played no small part.

George Little was born on a farm near Columbia, Lancaster County, Pa., February 9, 1808, and was of Scotch-Irish ancestry. His father, James Little, was born in County Tyrone, Ulster, Ireland, in 1786, and his paternal grandfather, James Little—or Lytle, as the name then was spelled—was a native of Scotland. His mother's maiden name was Rebecca Greer.

It was in 1836 that Mr. Little made his first visit to Rushville and he journeyed from the East on horseback to look the country over, and was so well satisfied that he returned the following year making the journey by way of the Ohio and Illinois Rivers. At this early day Mr. Little was young, energetic and resourceful and, seeing the possibilities of a mercantile career, at once engaged in business in a small way. Later he formed a partnership with Dr. Adam Dunlap, and conducted a store on the east side of the public square. His store conformed to the ideal of merchandising in those days and was a motley collection of groceries, wearing apparel, drugs and sundries. Its crudeness and crowded appearance disappeared, however, with the improvement of the community, and at all times arose to the emergency created by an increase of population and refinement of ideas.

In May, 1844, the firm of Little & Ray was formed, which continued until the death of Mr. Ray in 1881. For a time this firm did business on the south side of the square, and Mr. Thomas Wilson was admitted as a partner, but in 1853 the stock was removed to the present location of The George Little store, a handsome three-story building erected by the founder of the business in 1844.

The firm of Little & Ray did a tremendous business in early pioneer times, and in addition to general merchandising they engaged in pork-packing, and later established the first bank in the city, the history of which is given in the history of the county.

In his business affairs Mr. Little took keen pleasure and, at a time in life when most men would have sought pleasure in rest and recreation, he found his greatest satisfaction in directing the business he had founded, and which is today continued under his name as an incorporated company.

On September 1, 1840, Mr. Little was married to Miss Jane Lloyd, of Pittsburg, Pa. To them were born three children only one of whom, Mrs. Mary Scripps, lived to reach adult age, but who died in 1874, leaving two young sons, John Locke and George Henry Scripps, to Mr. Little's care. February 16, 1852, he was again married, this time to Miss Lydia Elizabeth Scripps, who died March 4, 1906. To them were born five children, and the surviving ones are: John S., Grace and Virginia E.

During his long and active life Mr. Little lived close to high ideals, and his citizenship was such that it imparted strength and substantiality to every undertaking in which his worth and ability were enlisted. He was companionable and well posted, observing the world from a wide range, and ever retained his faith in the goodness of mankind and in the existence of opportunity for all who seek it. A man of strong purpose, steady application and keen perception, he forged his way to the front by his own unaided efforts, and his long, busy life contributed much to the commercial prosperity of the city and county which constituted the theater of his activity. In manner he was quiet and unostentatious, avoiding all publicity and craving no official or political recognition; and yet he was ever ready to lend his personal support to every industrial and social movement that was for the best interests of the community. In politics Mr. Little was a supporter of the principles of the Republican party, and participated in its first organization in Schuyler County and maintained his allegiance to the party's principles to the end of his life.

LITTLE, John Scripps.—Of the men who are lending dignity, strength and special qualifications to the banking business in Rushville, none are held in higher esteem than John Scripps

Little. Mr. Little is forty-two years old, having been born in Rushville February 23, 1864, and substantially more than twenty years of his business life have been devoted to the study of monetary science. He was educated in the public schools, and early developed a taste for the kind of routine and precision which are among the most valuable assets of the embryo banker, in 1884 entering into the banking business practically in connection with the Bank of Rushville. He is a man of pleasing personality, and has the faculty of making and keeping friends. Socially he is connected with the Masons, and is a member of the Union League and Hamilton Clubs of Chicago. He is a Republican in politics, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mr. Little is of Scotch-Irish-English ancestry, a son of George and Lydia E. (Scripps) Little, the former a native of Columbia, Pa., and the latter born in Jackson, Mo. His paternal grandparents were James and Rebecca (Greer) Little, the former born in County Tyrone, Ireland, and his paternal great-grandfather was James Little, or Lytle, as the name then was spelled, who was born in Scotland, married a Miss Martin, and settled in County Tyrone, Ireland. The maternal grandparents of Mr. Little were George Henry and Mary (Huler) Scripps, natives of London, England, and Tennessee, respectively, and his maternal great-grandparents were William Armager and Grace (Locke) Scripps, natives of England, the former born in the quaint cathedral town of Ely.

LINCOLN, Charles, a greatly respected veteran of the Civil War, who was formerly engaged in farming in Littleton Township, Schuyler County, Ill., but in recent years, has been a resident of the village of Littleton, where he lives in retirement from active pursuits, was born in Brooklyn, Ill., June 15, 1844. Mr. Lincoln is a son of Jefferson and Sarah (Ryan) Lincoln. Jefferson Lincoln was a soldier in the Mexican War, and after returning from Mexico, he went to California, joining the eager throng of men who made their way to the gold fields in 1849 in quest of the precious metal. When starting homeward again, his journey having already begun, he met an old friend who induced him to remain in California for a time, and from that period he was never again heard from. Two years after the latest advices from him, his wife moved to Frederick, Ill., and made her home in Rushville, Ill., until the date of her death. Charles Lincoln remained with his mother until the summer of 1862, when he entered the army, receiving his education during his term of service. He enlisted at Rushville in August of that year, in Company C, One-hundred and Nineteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, his regiment being mustered in at Quincy and constituting a part of the Sixteenth Army Corps, under command of Gen. A. J. Smith. He was in the Army of the Mississippi, and took part in many of the engagements in that department. Upon his discharge from the service in the spring of 1865, he stayed a month at Mobile, Ala., and then came by boat to St. Louis, and up the Illinois River, going to Springfield, Ill., and finally returning home. Working for a while as a farm hand, he afterwards bought eighty acres of land in Section 13, Littleton Township, on which he followed farming for fifteen years. Selling out at the end of that period, he withdrew from active labor, purchasing a residence in Littleton, Ill., which has since been the family home.

Mr. Lincoln has been twice married, his first marriage taking place in the fall of 1866, when he was wedded to Anna Palmer, a native of England. By her he had nine children, as follows: Mary Jane (Mrs. David Gay), of Oakland Township, Schuyler County; William, a resident of Canton, Fulton County, Ill.; Sarah O. (Mrs. Usury), of Industry Township, McDonough County, Ill.; Alfred Barton, who lives at Adair, Ill.; Oscar, whose home is in Canada; Charles E., of Rocky Ford, Colo.; James, who lives in Canada; Thomas, a farmer of Littleton Township; and Nellie Bertha, who died in 1893, at the age of seven years. Anna (Palmer) Lincoln departed this life March 12, 1898. On November 11, 1899, Mr. Lincoln was joined in matrimony with Margaret L. Green, who was born in Wayne County, Ill., February 5, 1840, a daughter of James V. Green, later a resident of Quincy, Ill. The father of Mr. Charles Lincoln was a cousin of President Abraham Lincoln.

In politics, Charles Lincoln is identified with the Republican party; is also a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, belonging to the Grand Army Post of Rushville. His religious connection, as also that of his wife, is with the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is deeply respected, not only for his excellent qualities as a man and citizen, but because of his worthy record as one of the few survivors of Schuyler County's representatives in the great struggle for the preservation of the Union.

LOGSDON, George William.—Visitors to a farm lying on Section 29, Bainbridge Township, are invariably pleased with the well-kept orchards, neat buildings and cultivated fields, nor are they less pleased with the picturesque environment and the splendid view. Standing on the highest point of the farm (which, according to government reports, is only one and a half feet lower than the highest point in the State, near Galena), the eye beholds a delightful vision of smiling valleys, thriving towns, neat farms and waving fields, and one recognizes as never before the fascinating environment of the Illinois agriculturist. The farm is owned and operated by George William Logsdon, who has been a resident of Schuyler County since boyhood. While he is proud of the entire estate, perhaps he finds his chief source of gratification in the peach orchard of eight acres, containing all of the finest varieties of that luscious fruit and said to be one of the finest orchards of its kind in the entire State. There are now 1600 fruit bearing trees in the orchard, and in addition there is a small orchard of choice varieties of apple trees.

The record of the Logsdon family will be found on another section in the sketch of Perry Logsdon. Suffice it to say in this connection, that Joseph and Lucy (Parker) Logsdon moved from Brown County, Ill., to Schuyler County in 1844 and settled in Woodstock Township, where they cleared a farm. Their son, George W., was born in Brown County, November 14, 1852, and was twelve years of age when he came with his parents to Schuyler County, where he attended the district schools. Later he was sent to the Gem City Business College in Quincy. On his return to Schuyler County he taught school for two terms in the county where he was born, but afterward devoted his time to clearing land and cultivating a farm.

In 1891 Mr. Logsdon married Miss Margaret J. Kirkham, daughter of Henry and Clara Kirkham, both of Scotch lineage. In an early day her father came from his native State of Indiana to Schuyler County, Ill., where he and his wife make their home in Bainbridge Township. The year after his marriage Mr. Logsdon bought 160 acres on Section 29, where he has since engaged in tilling the soil, raising stock of good grades, and developing one of the finest peach orchards in the State. Of his marriage seven children were born, namely: Lucy C., Seth D., Goldie E., Emma Lou (who died in infancy), Mary Agnes (who died at the age of three years), Ruth A. and George M. Fraternally Mr. Logsdon is a Mason, a member of Cass Lodge of Beardstown, Ill., and an ardent believer in the philanthropic principles of that organization. All through his life he has made a study of the money question, which he considers one of our most important national problems. The result of his study has led him to co-operate with the Greenback or Populist party, whose principles he firmly believes to be based on justice, and ever since casting his ballot for Peter Cooper, he has never swerved in his allegiance to the men and measures pledged to secure for our country those monetary changes which he believes to be essential to business success and permanent prosperity.

LOGSDON, Jacob.—Prominent among the progressive and successful descendants of pioneers of Schuyler County is Jacob Logsdon, who, through the exercise of practical and praiseworthy qualities, has become the owner of a farm of 250 acres in Bainbridge and Woodstock Townships, and who is further recognized as a leader in political and social undertakings, and is a stock-holder in the Bank of Schuyler County. Mr. Logsdon was born near Cooperstown, Brown County, Ill., March 13, 1858, a son of Joseph Logsdon, well known in the earlier annals of farming in this part of the State.

Until reaching his twenty-sixth year Mr. Logsdon remained on his father's farm, having come to Schuyler County in 1865. His education is that furnished in the district schools, and on this practical foundation he has built a character and capacity for usefulness which well may be an inspiration to the youth of the coming generation. In 1884, Mr. Logsdon sought to try his fortunes in the State of Kansas, but after a brief experience in Cowley and Sedgwick Counties, was taken ill and returned to his Schuyler County home for recuperation. Convinced that he lived in a pretty good part of the United States, he since has made this his home, and as soon as he recovered from his illness he rented land and bought and fed cattle. Thrifty and far-sighted, he laid by all possible of his earnings, and in 1885 bought his first eighty acres of land, in Section 12, Woodstock Township, which at that time was practically destitute of improvements. For two years he farmed this land, and in the spring of 1888 built a small three-room house. October 17, 1888, he married Amelia Krohe, daughter of Lewis E. Krohe, and born in Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County, December 26, 1863. Installing his young wife in the little house, the housekeeping and land developing went hand in hand; children came to gladden the parents and bring sunshine into the well kept home, and a spirit of harmony and success grew out of earnest toil and unremitting co-operation. In 1903 the house that had witnessed so many changes and given shelter in so many storms, gave place to the modern structure now occupied by the family, which has eight large rooms all airy and well furnished. There are few rural homes in the county which afford so many advantages as does this one, and in which is expressed such interest for the physical, mental and moral well being of its inhabitants. With the latest magazines and periodicals always on hand, with opportunities for music and varied entertainment, and with the most genial and delightful of outdoor surroundings, this farm may be called an ideal one of its kind, and it is widely considered one of the most hospitable and productive.

To Mr. and Mrs. Logsdon have been born five daughters, of whom Amy Louisa, a graduate of the Rushville High School, class of 1908, gives promise of literary success, having already contributed many readable articles to current periodicals; Ada Leonora, born January 20, 1892, is attending the Rushville High School; Sophia Ellen Lucy was born August 11, 1894; Viola Agnes was born July 11, 1895; and Violet Augusta was born October 3, 1899. The children are receiving every advantage which means and intelligent direction can command, and will be proficient in musical and other accomplishments. The parents of this interesting family are enthusiastic sharers of the interests of their children, and as a result they are their boon companions and most confidential advisers. From such an atmosphere come the best men and women in the land. Sometime since Mr. Logsdon retired from active labors on the farm, but he still supervises its management, and is as keenly interested as ever in its output and improvement. He is a generous contributor to many worthy causes, is an earnest if not an active Democrat, and fraternally is an honored member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He has been a stock-holder in the Bank of Schuyler County since 1902.

LOGSDON, Hon. Perry.—It would be difficult to find an old resident of Schuyler County to whom the name of Perry Logsdon is unfamiliar, for Mr. Logsdon has been long and intimately associated with the agricultural and political life of the county, and has been especially prominent in Woodstock Township, long his home and headquarters. Thirty-five years and more have passed since he acquired his first landed estate in the township, the date of his purchase having been December 23, 1871, and the amount, 120 acres of Section 11. About two years after acquiring his first property he erected a commodious residence on Section 1, and in this attractive home he has since remained, welcoming to its hospitable walls the many friends whom he has won in a long and honorable career. At this writing he owns 393 acres, all within Woodstock Township except an eighty-acre tract in Bainbridge Township.

Born in Madison County, Ky., July 8, 1842, Perry Logsdon is a son of Joseph and Lucy (Parker) Logsdon, also natives of Madison County. When he was eighteen months old he was brought to Illinois by his parents, who settled in Brown County and remained there from 1844 until 1865. During the latter year they removed to Schuyler County, settling in Woodstock Township, where the father died June 11, 1900, at the age of ninety-one, and the mother May 30, 1892, at the age of seventy-eight years. Nothing of especial importance occurred in the early life of Perry Logsdon until the outbreak of the Civil War turned his mind from the studies of school and the work on the farm to graver duties connected with citizenship. December 1, 1861, his name was enrolled and he was mustered in as a member of Company H, Fiftieth Illinois Infantry at St. Joseph, Mo. The date of his enlistment papers should have been one month earlier, as he had been accepted as a volunteer at that time.

The Fiftieth Regiment took part in many long marches and hard-fought battles, and Mr. Logsdon endured all the vicissitudes incident to a soldier's life. Among his first engagements in which he participated were those at Forts Henry and Donelson, at Shiloh and Corinth, Miss., and Resaca, Tenn., after which he fought at Altoona and Bentonville. From January of 1864 the history of his regiment is that of Sherman's army in its march to the sea. At the close of the war the regiment participated in the Grand Review at Washington and Mr. Logsdon was mustered out July 13, 1865, as First Lieutenant of his company. During his absence in the army his parents had removed from Brown to Schuyler County, and hither he came after receiving an honorable discharge. On Friday he arrived at the new home of his parents and, on Monday following, began work in the harvest field, after which he continued actively engaged in farming pursuits.

The marriage of Perry Logsdon and Miss Lizzie Byers was solemnized September 5, 1867, in a log cabin erected on the day of the inauguration of William Henry Harrison as President of the United States. They are the parents of three children: Luella, at home; Julia, widow of George Howell, and now living with her parents; and Charles, who married Grace Cox of Coopers-town, has one son, Russell, and one daughter, Greta Corine. The son is engaged in farming on Section 2, Woodstock Township. Mrs. Logsdon is an earnest member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Mr. Logsdon is a contributor to the same, as well as to all religious movements, although not personally identified with any denomination. Politically he has been a local Republican leader for years. During the 'seventies he was Township Assessor and a member of the Board of Supervisors from Woodstock Township. It is evidence of his popularity that he was several times elected Supervisor in face of a customary Democratic majority in his township. Among all classes of people and all parties, he is admired and honored as an able citizen and honored veteran of the war. A high honor came to him during 1884, in his election as Representative in the Thirty-fourth General Assembly, comprising the counties of Schuyler, Cass, Mason and Menard, and four years later he was again chosen to the same position. During his service as Representative he was a member of many important committees and always voted for the interest of the people, winning an enviable position in the confidence of his constituents. One of the most memorable incidents in connection with his membership in the Legislature, was his attitude as one of the patriotic "One Hundred and Three" who determinedly and persistently stood for the election of Gen. John A. Logan to the United States Senate. In that critical period Mr. Logsdon acquitted himself with honor and fearlessness, and won a reputation by no means limited to his own district. The county which, for so many years, has benefited by his loyal citizenship, is dear to him by the ties of long association, and he has been a persistent champion of all measures for its benefit. In the city of Rushville, where he is a Bank Director, he has a large number of friends among the most honored social circles, and his pleasant country home has been the scene of many reunions of the old friends of the family.

LOOP, Josiah.—The genealogy of this well-known farmer of Schuyler County is traced to Germany, whence some of the name crossed the ocean to America in a very early period of our country's history. The records show that George Loop removed from Ohio to Indiana and thence to Illinois, where he died in Clark County. During his residence in Ohio his son David was born, and from there he accompanied the family to Indiana, where he met and married Mary Beach, a native of Pennsylvania. About 1847 they removed from Indiana to Illinois and settled at Pleasantview, Schuyler County, where he built his first home in Illinois. While he made farming his principal occupation, he was handy with tools and did other work, for a time following the cooper's trade. The shoes that his children wore were often of his own workmanship, for he had picked up an excellent knowledge of the shoemaker's trade.

Leaving Pleasantview about 1855, David Loop removed to Missouri and entered government land in Scotland County, but in 1856 he disposed of the property and returned to Illinois. Shortly afterward he bought eighty acres on Section 1, Huntsville Township, Schuyler County, besides forty acres in Birmingham Township. The land was in its primeval state of wildness, no attempt having yet been made at placing it under cultivation and its agricultural possibilities being unknown. After building a house he at once began the arduous task of breaking ground and raising his first crops. The results were gratifying and he continued on the place until about 1879, at which time he had about 300 acres. During that year he removed to Carthage, Hancock County, where he bought a house with four acres of ground. Having sold this place in 1884, he bought property in Camden village, where he died in 1887, his wife passing away eleven months later.

In the family of David Loop there were ten children, of whom three sons and two daughters are now living. One child died in infancy; Samantha died about 1902; George, who was a soldier in Company E, Seventy-eighth Illinois Infantry, until the close of the Civil War, died about 1903; Amanda is the widow of Nicholas Burwood and resides at Galesburg, Ill.; John, of Augusta, Hancock County, was a member of Company E, Fifty-ninth Illinois Infantry, and served from July, 1861, until the close of the war. Next in order of birth was Josiah, born in Vermillion County, Ind., July 5, 1844. Mary, Mrs. Robert Redding, is deceased, as is also Caroline, who was the wife of J. M. Walters, of Keokuk, Iowa. Catherine is the wife of Rev. Amos Rigney, of the United Brethren Church, and they make their home in Adair, McDonough County, Ill. The father of this family was an influential member of the United Brethren Church, in whose doctrines he and his wife were consistent believers, and to whose support he contributed generously. The various township offices to which he was elected he filled with fidelity and diligence. It was his privilege to hear the illustrious Lincoln in some of his debates, and the first speech he listened to was sufficient to convert him to a belief in Republican principles, after which he always cast his ballot with that party.

Upon the migration of the family to Schuyler County in 1847, Josiah Loop was a child three years of age. Hence his early recollections cluster around the scenes familiar in his mature years. With the exception of a brief period

Huntsville Township has been his home for many years. When he was twenty years of age he left home to give his services to the Union in the Civil War, enlisting October 24, 1864, in Company F, Forty-third Illinois Infantry, and remaining with his regiment until he was honorably discharged in October of 1865. On his return to Schuyler County he resumed farming pursuits. In 1868 he married Miss Lenna, daughter of John Pierce, and during the same year he and his bride began housekeeping in Kansas, where he and a brother, John Loop, bought land in Cherokee County. While making his home there his wife died in 1873, leaving two sons, Sidney P., now at home, and Charles E., of Chicago. The year following his wife's death he returned to Illinois and resumed farming in Schuyler County, where in 1876 he married Mary E. Milton. Afterward he bought forty acres, to which he has added 120 acres, making a quarter-section farm located on Section 12, Huntsville Township. Of his second marriage nine children were born, namely: William, who died in infancy; John E., a farmer in Birmingham Township; Mary Alice, who died at the age of eighteen; Amanda J. (Mrs. George Myers), of Camden, Schuyler County; James S., at home; Lulu Belle, who died in infancy; Benjamin N., at home; Enoch M., who died at two years of age; and Amos, at home. Mrs. Loop is a member of the Christian Church. In politics Mr. Loop votes with the Republican party, while the memory of war times is kept fresh through association with comrades in the Grand Army Post, of which he is an active member. Throughout the community he is honored as a persevering farmer, patriotic citizen and honorable man, one whose life has been characterized by integrity and whose success is richly merited.

LORING, Jesse Monroe, a well-known and quite popular attorney-at-law, of Rushville, Ill., who commands the respect and confidence of a considerable clientele, and has an excellent standing in the estimation of the general public of his locality, was born in Buena Vista Township, Schuyler County, Ill., February 11, 1874. Mr. Loring is a son of William H. and Sarah (Grig) Loring, natives respectively of Wabash County, Ill., and Zanesville, Ohio, the father being a farmer by occupation. The paternal grandfather was John Loring, of Pennsylvania, the maiden name of whose wife was Utter. In boyhood Jesse M. Loring attended the district schools of Buena Vista Township and was subsequently a student of the Rushville Normal School. His professional education was obtained in the Chicago College of Law, from which institution he was graduated in 1900. After completing his legal course, he devoted his attention to the real-estate and loan business, in which he continued until 1904, when he entered upon the practice of law in Rushville. He is a lawyer of solid attainments and is recognized as one of the most promising among the younger members of the Bar of Schuyler County.

On October 4, 1900, Mr. Loring was united in marriage with Bessie M. Danner, who was born in Astoria, Fulton County, Ill., and received her education in the district schools in the vicinity of her home. One child, Marguerite May, has been the result of this union.

In politics, Mr. Loring is identified with the Republican party, and wields no small influence in its local councils. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M.; the I. O. O. F.; the K. of P.; the M. W. of A.; Mystic Workers of the World; the M. P. of E.; and Eagles. His religious connection is with the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which his wife is also a member. In the social circles of Rushville both are held in cordial esteem and their friends are numerous.

MALCOMSON, James.—A representative of the whole souled and dependable transplanted Irishman was found in James Malcomson, who, though he spent the greater part of his life under the protection of the Stars and Stripes, retained always traces of his virile nationality, more especially of the quality of adaptability which makes his country men at home in any clime and in almost any occupation. Mr. Malcomson was born in December, 1825, in County Down, Ireland, a principal maritime and agricultural section, a son of Robert and Ann (Cleland) Malcomson, neither of whom ever strayed from the humble surroundings of their native land.

Average advantages and an observing mind created ambitions in the mind of James Malcomson which never could have found realization in the land of his forefathers. He was twenty-two years old when he embarked for America, and his first stopping place was New York City, where he worked at shoemaking several years, and where, in 1851, he was united in marriage to Ann Boyle, a native of County Tyrone, Ireland, who came to the United States with her sister in 1850. Mr. Malcomson continued to ply his trade in New York until moving to Youngstown, Ohio, and from there he came to Pleasantview, Rushville Township in 1872, the same remaining his home until his death, February 18, 1906. In Illinois he abandoned the tools of the shoemaker for the implements of the farmer, and succeeded well at general farming and stock-raising, developing his valuable property into one of the most fertile and homelike places in the township. Around him he reared an interesting family of children, to all of whom he gave every advantage within his means, and all were trained in the duties of house or field, according to their needs and tendencies. In the order of their birth the children are as follows: Mary, wife of John A. Ballou, who was born in 1851 in New York, and who is the mother of three children as follows: Dr. Jesse Ballou, a practicing physician of Lead, South Dakota; Lizzie, wife of Monroe Lenhart, who resides at Littleton, Ill., and Chester, who married Florence Caldwell and resides in Rushville Township; Ellen Malcomson, born in 1856, wife of Leander Kennedy, and mother of Bessie, Ruby and James Kennedy; Lizzie, wife of Robert H. Hamilton, a retired farmer of Bardon, McDonough County, Ill., and mother of four children—Mabel, wife of Howard Smith, Maude, John and Eva; William, who is farming on the old home place, on September 21, 1898, married Julia Dodds, born in Bainbridge Township, January 20, 1875, a daughter of Thomas Dodds, and whose daughter, Ruby, was born October 19, 1900, and son, Ralph J., born May 28, 1905; Florence, who lives on the home place with her mother; James, who married Addie Dunlap, resides in Bainbridge Township, and has eight children; and John, whose biographical record appears elsewhere in this volume.

Mr. Malcomson's farm formerly belonged to Samuel Lowry, father of Thomas Lowry, of Minneapolis, and the latter was reared to manhood upon it, departing upon his present broad and useful life with the complete equipment of a youthful farmer. In political affiliation Mr. Malcomson was a Republican, but he had no desire for the honors of office. In religion he was a Methodist Episcopalian. Some of his saddest memories were in connection with the Civil War, in which he enlisted as a private in Company A, One Hundred and Fifth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, serving from July, 1862, until July, 1865. After the war he became a member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

MALCOMSON, John.—As the operator of 180 acres of land in Frederick Township, Schuyler County, Ill., eighty acres of which he owns, John Malcomson is maintaining the family prestige for intelligent and successful farming, and for honest and useful citizenship. Mr. Malcomson was born in Youngstown, Ohio, January 30, 1869, and with his father, James Malcomson, came to Schuyler County in 1872. He was educated in the public schools, and when a youth, shared the general advantages and diversions of his neighborhood, developing a genuine liking for the occupation to which his life is being devoted.

The turning point in the life of Mr. Malcomson was his marriage, at the age of twenty-one, to Carrie Bellamy, who was born in Browning Township, Schuyler County, a daughter of Josiah Bellamy, one of the honored pioneers and farmers of the county. Mr. and Mrs. Malcomson have two children, Maggie and Florence. The eighty acres of land owned by Mr. Malcomson constitute one of the earliest settled properties in his township, and the place is also one of the most valuable and highly cultivated. He is engaged in raising general produce and stock, and has a comfortable residence, substantial barns and outbuildings, well kept fences and the most practical of agricultural implements. He is a thorough and painstaking farmer, well abreast of the times, and bids fair to take a prominent place among the wealthy and influential farmers of his neighborhood.

The activity of Mr. Malcomson extends beyond his home acres to the general affairs of the community, embracing matters pertaining to education, politics and religion. He is fraternally connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Rushville, and the Modern Woodmen of America, of Pleasantview, and in politics favors the Republican party. The public has profited by his conscientious service in several local offices, and he has been, and still is, one of the strong forces in the Methodist Episcopal Church. He has been a member of the church for many years, has served several years as a trustee, and was the chief solicitor of funds for the erection of the present church edifice at Pleasantview. This church is 30 by 44 feet, in ground dimensions, with a sixteen-foot ceiling, and a basement and heating apparatus. Among its best known contributors was Thomas Lowry, of Minneapolis, who spent his youth in this neighborhood, and who gladly donated $1,000 toward its construction. Mr. Malcomson has been unremitting in his devotion to the interests of this denomination, a fact which indicates a warm religious nature, manifested not only on the Sabbath, but every day in the week and every week in the year. Mr. Malcomson is an exemplary young man, of kindly disposition and broad views, and his life fully justifies the confidence and esteem in which he is held by the residents of the township.

MALCOMSON, Robert.—There are few finer examples of filial respect and attachment than are presented in the career of Robert Malcomson, while a resident of Schuyler County. He was born December 18, 1857, in County Down, Ireland, a son of Thomas and Eliza (McDowell) Malcomson, who were also natives of that county. In 1859, after their marriage, they came to America, first locating in Youngstown, Ohio, but in 1864 returning to their native land, where the wife and mother died. Tenderly placing her remains in the cemetery near her old Irish home, father and son then started back to Youngstown, but their stay there was short and in October of the same year they located in Schuyler County, Robert then being a boy about seven years of age.

Thomas Malcomson, a gardener by occupation, was an expert in the rearing of hot-house plants and an artist in the arrangement of flowers and shrubs. In his younger days he was an expert bookkeeper, but not liking that profession, despite his proficiency in it, turned his attention to gardening with pronounced success. For some years father and son kept bachelor hall together finding busy and profitable employment in their chosen field, and finally out of their savings, were enabled to purchase sixty acres of land in Section 25, Rushville Township, the place being owned by William D. Clemmons. After they had erected a one-story dwelling they commenced to grub the stumps and clear off the timber eventually making of it a fine homestead which was subsequently bought by John A. Ballou. The father and son then purchased 109 acres of land in Section 26, in the same township, known as the old David McMasters farm. Virtually no improvements had then been made, and the place was little more than a wild blackberry patch. Moving into a small frame building, they resumed their lonely housekeeping and the work of grubbing, clearing, cultivating, draining and general improvement, but this homestead was only fairly in shape before the hand of death stayed the labors of the father and separated him from the faithful son. The deceased was a member of the Presbyterian Church, which he had joined in his native land, and both in religious and educational work he was an active and valued participant while residing in Schuyler County.

On May 20, 1892, after his father's death, Robert Malcomson was married to Lizzie Adams, born December 25, 1870, and also a native of County Down, Ireland. She is a daughter of Charles and Ann (Redmon) Adams, and her parents are still living in the old country. Two of her brothers, David and Charles Adams, are living in Chicago, while her sister Jane is the wife of Samuel Dalzell. The brothers and sisters residing near her old home in Ireland, who are either farmers or the wives of farmers, are as follows: Margaret; William McMillan; William John, who married Elisa Graham; Minnie, now Mrs. Hugh Kerr; and Blanch, Mrs. Robert Gamble.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Robert Malcomson began housekeeping in the modest house which had been occupied by the father and son, and there remained until the completion of their fine home. This consists of ten large, light rooms, supplied with hot and cold water, furnace heat and all modern improvements,—one of the most complete residences in Rushville Township. To the original purchase of 109 acres Mr. Malcomson has added fifty acres, so that he has now a homestead of good size, thoroughly improved and embracing a good grade of all kinds of stock.

Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Malcomson, as follows: Anna, Margaret C., Blanche, Minnie Black, Robert Adams and Thomas Charles. Anna was born June 3, 1894; Margaret C., January 1, 1896; Minnie Black, September 1, 1898; Robert Adams, May 20, 1902; and Thomas Charles, March 7, 1904, the Lord taking him home the same year. Both parents are members of the Presbyterian Church. In politics, Mr. Malcomson is strongly Republican, and, while earnestly desirous of his party's success and an active worker therefor, he has always declined the honors which have been tendered him, centering his energies in the proper rearing of his family, and the continued development of the property to which are attached so many tender though sad recollections.

MANLOVE, William B.—It is an undisputed fact that Mr. Manlove pays a larger realty tax than any other resident of Birmingham Township, Schuyler County, Ill., a statement which shows him to be the largest landowner in the township. To his original purchase of 170 acres he has added from time to time, until he now owns over 1,000 acres, all of which has been accumulated through his own industry. His first boyhood efforts were as a farm hand, receiving in compensation for his services the munificent wage of twenty-five cents a day; occasionally he added to his little hoard by trapping in the woods. It was with the money thus earned that he contributed his share toward erecting a suitable monument over the grave of his father, who passed away when he was a lad of about six years.

The Manlove family was established in Schuyler County by the grandfather, William Manlove, coming here from North Carolina in 1830. His family originally comprised six children; William, George, Jonathan, David, Ann Mary and Rachel, but all are now deceased. With his wife, formerly Charity Bodenhammer, Jonathan Q. Manlove came with his father to the wilds of Illinois, settling on a lot in Rushville, and it was on this lot in the winter of 1830, that his son William B. was born. Two years later he purchased land near Sugar Grove, which lies south of Rushville, living there about a year and then moving to Birmingham Township, where he established his home and spent the remainder of his life. These were indeed trying times to the early settlers, but those who were of stout heart ultimately reached success through persistent efforts. After clearing a small patch of ground he planted the land to corn, and from season to season brought more land under cultivation. In 1835 he erected a log cabin on the farm, his death occurring here June 9, 1836, at the age of twenty-eight years, his birth having occurred in North Carolina, March 15, 1808. March 5, 1830, he was married to Charity Bodenhammer, who was born February 4, 1809, and at his death he left his wife with four little children, one of their children having previously died October 6, 1834. Betsey Manlove, the eldest daughter, was born October 8, 1832; she died in Kansas in 1904, the wife of William Delapp, his death occurring two years later. Mary Manlove was born August 22, 1834, and died October 26, 1834. David Manlove was born April 20, 1836, and is now a resident of Linn County, Kansas.

The eldest child born to his parents was William B., who was born in Rushville, Ill., December 28, 1830. The fact that his father died when he was only six years old left little hope for securing even the meager education which the primitive schools afforded. As his mother's main support the two struggled together to make a living for themselves and the other children, the mother's weaving and spinning, however, contributing at this time more largely to that end than did the efforts of the young child. Some time after the death of her first husband she was married to Jacob Wlre, who was born in North Carolina December 6, 1800. Her death occurred about 1847, up to which time William had continued to make his home with his mother and step-father. The loss of his mother marked the beginning of a new era in his life, and from this time on he was entirely dependent on his own resources. His first work consisted of clearing the timber from one acre of land, for which he received fifty cents a day, it requiring eight days to fell and clear away the heavy hickory trees with which the land was covered. Other work of a similar character was offered and accepted, and with the proceeds of his labor he was finally enabled to purchase a yoke of oxen, which he used in breaking a farm of thirteen acres in Birmingham Township, which he later planted to corn. The next year, 1851, he sold the yoke of oxen and bought a mare. His marriage, March 31, 1853, united him with Abigail L. Swisegood, a native of North Carolina, who had made her home in Illinois since 1846. After their marriage they began housekeeping in the log cabin on the farm, and although their home and surroundings were primitive, they were young and hopeful, and their united efforts soon began to make a marked difference in the outlook. Mr. Manlove bought an undivided half interest in 170 acres of land for which he paid $200, and as his brother reached his maturity he purchased the latter's interest in the land, paying him $600 therefor. To his original tract of 170 acres he has continued to add as his means would permit, until as previously stated, he now owns over 1,000 acres of land in Birmingham Township.

Six children were born of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Manlove, four of whom were sons. Eli died of typhoid fever at the age of twenty-four, leaving a widow, formerly Nettie Lawler, and one son, William, who married Minnie Raymond, by whom he has one child, Donald. Laura Manlove became the wife of Frank Cassidy, a farmer of Birmingham Township, and they have the following children,—William, Ethel, Roy, Ray and Ivy, one child having died in infancy. Jacob Manlove, a farmer in Birmingham Township, married Etta Twidwell, and they have three daughters and one son—Inez, who is the wife of Alvah Higgins and the mother of two children, Marie and Raleigh; Mary, wife of John Wear and mother of one child, Dorothy; Thomas and Blanche. Isabel Manlove became the wife of George Homberger, a farmer of Birmingham Township, and is now deceased, having been the mother of one child, Zemeth. James T. Manlove is a farmer of the same township, as is also his brother Joseph E., who married Ada Copeland, and has four children—Troy, Floy, Leo and Ralph.

In the death of his wife, March 8, 1907, Mr. Manlove was bereft of his companion of over fifty years. She is remembered as one of the pioneer women of the township, and side by side she worked with her husband under circumstances which were often discouraging, but through it all she retained her hopeful, cheery disposition. In the early days they went a long distance to the Congregational Church, she riding horseback, and he walking by her side. Since those days many radical changes have been made, and Mr. Manlove has been no small factor in bringing them about. With Samuel DeCounter, he shares the honor of being one of the two oldest residents of Schuyler County. Mr. DeCounter having been born in Woodstock, Ill., October 6, 1827, and Mr. Manlove in Rushville December 28, 1830. Mr. Manlove cast his first vote for Millard Fillmore, and since that time has voted for Republican candidates. He takes commendable pride in the fact that he has never in his life bought a drop of liquor as a beverage, has never played a game of cards, and has never used tobacco in any form.

MANYX, Patrick.—The Manyx family presumably originated in County Clare, a maritime county of Munster, Ireland, where Patrick Manyx was born in 1840, and whence he came to America in a sailing vessel in 1854, at the age of fourteen years. Accompanied by his aunt, he spent some time in Pennsylvania, and in 1859 came to Illinois, where he chanced to meet Miss Mary Bowe, who subsequently became his wife, and who surviving him, has demonstrated remarkable ability in overcoming obstacles and managing a large estate. The marriage of Miss Bowe and Mr. Manyx occurred in Peoria about 1861, and a year later the young people came to the farm owned at that time by Mrs. Manyx's father, James Bowe, and now the prized possession of his daughter. Mr. Manyx died on June 22, 1882, and Mr. Bowe, December 24, 1886. To Mr. and Mrs. Manyx were born six children, four of whom are living: James, born January 22, 1862, a resident of Rushville; Mollie, who died at the age of fourteen years; John, on the home place; Mike, a farmer in Bainbridge Township; an infant who died unnamed, and Lizzie, wife of Andrew Volk, a farmer in the vicinity of La Grange, Brown County, Ill.

Although an industrious man and quite successful as a farmer, Mr. Manyx left his family almost no available assets, his widow having, after all expenses had been paid, the sum of twenty-five cents in money. From this nucleus she has developed truly wonderful results, has lifted the mortgage from the small farm, and added to it until now she owns 700 acres, 245 acres in Woodstock Township, 455 acres in Bainbridge Township and 80 acres in Mt. Sterling Township, Brown County, bought in 1907 at a cost of $11,000. In this she had the help of her sturdy and willing sons, but her brain has done the planning, and her economy the saving, and unquestionably there are few women in the line of business in this part of the State who have established such a record of achievement. The farm occupied by the family is remarkably homelike, and its improvements conform to the most exacting standards of the present. The buildings are modern and commodious, the fences in good repair, and the machinery selected with the greatest care and good judgment. Mrs.

Manyx has ever been a hard worker, but she has found time to give her children every advantage within her power, and to train them to noble and useful manhood and womanhood.

James Manyx, who inherits his mother's managerial and business ability, was married in 1893 to Mary Sullivan, of County Clare, Ireland, who came to America alone in 1884. Mr. Manyx is a scientific farmer, and in stock devotes his attention principally to the breeding of Poland-China hogs. He is thoroughly devoted to the farm, and finds little time for the outside interests of the community. As was his father, in politics, James Manyx is a Democrat, and in religion a Roman Catholic. The family enjoy an enviable reputation and have many friends among the best people of the community.

MARKEY, Harvey B.—The Markey family came originally from England, the grandfather, William Markey, emigrating from Gloucestershire, and planting the name in the New World. From Maryland, where he first located, he went to Harrison County, Ohio, and there died prior to the birth of his grandson, Harvey B. In Harrison County his son and namesake, William Markey, was born, and there, too, he was reared and married. With his wife, who was formerly Lucina Smith, he came to Illinois in 1859, overland, and until 1862 they made their home in Fulton County. In that year they went to Hancock County and four years later, in 1866, located in Birmingham Township, Schuyler County, and purchased 180 acres of the old Landrus farm. Times were hard and Mr. Markey found it difficult to provide for his large family from the products of his farm alone. It was this condition which led his son Harvey to accept the position of mail carrier between Plymouth and Rushville, receiving for his services $480 per year, and making one trip per week. The father, in his early life, was one of the most extensive stock buyers of Harrison County, Ohio, buying all kinds of stock, which he drove to Pittsburg and Baltimore. He was also engaged in mercantile business with a partner, but through unscrupulous dealings, the latter cheated him out of his interest. A number of years before removing from Ohio (in 1852), Mr. Markey sent his son Daniel to Illinois with a drove of 2,000 sheep, but the venture was a total loss. When he located in the State himself in 1859, he came practically empty-handed, having only a warrant for eighty acres of land and possessing $30 in cash. He traded the land warrant for eight head of milch cows, and from this small beginning persevered steadily until he owned over 400 acres of as fine land as could be found in Schuyler County. Politically, he was first a Whig and later a Republican, and was a strong advocate of the cause of temperance. Previous to the Civil War his home in Ohio was one of the stations on the "underground railroad," and many a fugitive slave was cared for under his hospitable roof. He died in 1889, and his wife, the mother of Harvey B., passed away in 1891. By his first wife he had eight children, of whom but two are living,—Hannah, the wife of C. Sprole, and Eliza V., wife of George Boyd, both of Tuscarawas County, Ohio. Fourteen children were born of his marriage with Lucina Smith, of whom only eight are now living, viz: Mary, who married Eland Hale, a farmer of Birmingham Township; Harriet, widow of Harry E. Coe, who lives in Blandinsville, Ill.; Harvey B.; John B. and Annie S., twins, the former a resident of Ringgold County, Ia., and the latter, wife of Oliver Brach, of Plymouth, Ill.; Jesse M. and Jessie Lee, also twins, the former a resident of Liberty, Ill., and the latter, wife of J. Vaughn, of Meadow Grove, Neb.; and Noah R., a farmer in Birmingham Township.

Harvey B. Markey was born in Harrison County, Ohio, September 5, 1847, and was therefore a lad of about twelve years when the family settled in Illinois. He well remembers the struggles of the early days in the new surroundings, and as previously stated, when he was only eighteen years of age, he drove the mail wagon from Plymouth to Rushville. He continued to make his home with his parents until he was twenty-one years old, when he went to work by the month for Charles Mitchell. His marriage took place in Sangamon County, November 9, 1876, Charlotte Mitchell, the daughter of Charles and Hannah Mitchell, then becoming his wife. She was born in Sangamon County, Ill., March 29, 1855. For several years after their marriage the young people made their home in Sangamon County, but in 1881 they moved to Schuyler County, and located on the farm which Mr. Markey then purchased in Section 12, Birmingham Township, where they have since made their home. Seven children were born to them, but only four are now living, three having died in infancy. Of those surviving, Edith became the wife of Albert Jones, a farmer in Schuyler County, and they have one child, Aylene. The others, Frederick, Bessie and Frank, are still at home with their parents.

Much credit is due Mr. Markey for what he had accomplished since taking up his home in Birmingham Township, where he is known as one of the most up-to-date farmers, owning 164 acres of excellent farming land. In addition to general farming he raises considerable stock, making a specialty of red cattle. Everything about the farm marks the owner as an industrious and progressive farmer, the fences and outbuildings being kept in repair, as is the residence, which is a commodious eight-room house. Mr. Markey has filled many offices in Birmingham Township, among them that of Justice of the Peace, in which capacity he served for eight years. Politically, he is a staunch Republican, and fraternally, he belongs to the Masonic lodge at Huntsville, and to the camp of the Modern Woodmen of America, at Birmingham. Mr. and Mrs. Markey are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and both are held in high esteem in their home community.

MARLOW, John Wesley.—The agricultural interests of Schuyler County, Ill., have a well-known representative in John Wesley Marlow, a native-born son of Camden Township, where practically all of his busy and useful life has been passed. The subscription schools of this locality afforded him such advantages as were possible in pioneer days. The churches of the community gave him religious training and taught him in youth the duty which he owed to God and mankind. The soil of the township, tilled in a systematic manner, netted him a fair income from early life and laid the foundation of his present prosperity, enabling him from time to time to add to his possessions until at this writing he owns 365 acres of valuable farm land.

The record of the family appears in the sketch of Levi S. Marlow, presented upon another page of this volume. John Wesley Marlow was born at the old homestead August 16, 1840, being a son of Hanson Marlow. After having gained a knowledge of the three R's in the neighboring schools, he turned his attention to general farming, in which he acquired a thorough training under his father. On August 15, 1861, he was united in marriage with Eliza Jane Green, daughter of William and Hannah (Spencer) Green, honored pioneers of Schuyler County, but both now deceased. Of the Green family one son and one daughter (Mrs. Ayers) alone survive, and they are residents of Camden Township. After his marriage Mr. Marlow settled on Section 14, Camden Township, where he bought ninety-five acres of bottom land wholly unimproved, and during the next five years he was busily engaged in the cultivation of the property. While living on that farm two of his children were born. About 1866 he sold the land and removed to Richardson County, Neb., but in the fall of that year he returned to Schuyler County and traded his Nebraska property for eighty acres on Section 27, Camden Township, where he has since made his home. In 1881 he lost his first wife, by whom he had the following children: Levi, William Ray, Mary E., Henry, Rosetti, Charles W., and Annie. Levi was born May 31, 1862, and died January 26, 1865; Mary E. was born October 26, 1864, and died September 11, 1876. William R., was born February 25, 1866, and died December 8, 1868. Henry, born February 14, 1868, is a farmer in Camden Township. He married Sophia Weightman, by whom he has had seven children, five of whom are living. Rosetti, was born December 10, 1869, is the wife of Albert Lung, a farmer in Camden Township, by whom she has had nine children, seven of whom are living. Charles W., born November 18, 1871, died February 12, 1873; and Annie, born April 18, 1874, deceased wife of Mead Clayton, left one child.

The second marriage of John Wesley Marlow united him with Jemima Weightman, who was born in Camden Township February 1, 1863, being a daughter of that honored pioneer, William Weightman, who is still living, his wife having died February 4, 1908. Of this union six children were born, namely: Asa U., born December 6, 1883, who died November 2, 1903; Martha Jane, born May 10, 1885; Getrude Victoria, born December 28, 1886, who is the wife of Burt A. Davis, a farmer of Camden Township; John W., born March 17, 1891, who assists his father on the farm; Minnie Elizabeth, born May 1, 1893; and Nettie Ruth, born July 29, 1895. The hospitality of the Marlow family is proverbial. Their guests look with especial pleasure upon a visit to the farm, whose genial owner deservedly ranks among the honored men of the township. In local improvements he has maintained a constant interest. His devotion to his native county is unquestioned, and his solicitude regarding its permanent prosperity is deep. In religious work he has been faithful and generous. The Union Chapel owes its organization and usefulness largely to his labors. To the building of this house of worship he contributed $55 in cash and forty-five days' work, while Mr. Weightman gave $50 and his work, the united labors of the two men being the means of dedicating the church free from debt. Many have been the changes his eyes have beheld since his youth. Agricultural processes have been revolutionized. In early days he was accustomed to the tedious task of threshing the wheat with a flail; the grain was then hauled by wagon to Quincy, where it was sold at twenty-five cents per bushel. The days of "dollar wheat" were then undreamed of, nor were there any prophets to herald the coming inventions which would radically change all known methods of harvesting and threshing. The telephone was then unheard of, and many other conveniences, which are regarded as necessities by people in the twentieth century, were then unknown, yet the pioneers look back upon those days with a keen recollection of the many pleasures they enjoyed and a vivid appreciation of their happiness in spite of the lack of modern improvements.

MARLOW, Levi S.—Adjacent to the village of Mabel, Schuyler County, Ill., lies the farm of 200 acres which for sixty-three years, or during his entire lifetime, has been the home of Mr. Marlow. Here he was born August 16, 1844, the son of Hanson and Esther (Whiteman) Marlow, the former a native of Kentucky, and the latter a descendant of Virginian ancestors. About the time of his first marriage, in 1825, Hanson Marlow came to Illinois as a pioneer and here he was deprived of the companionship of his wife, here death occurring soon afterward. Subsequently he was united in marriage with Esther (Whiteman) Ayers, a widow, whose husband had died of cholera. About 1826 Mr. Marlow came to Schuyler County, settling at first near Littleton, and about 1837 he came to Camden Township, on Section 22, and here he rounded out the remainder of his long and useful career. At the time he came to this locality there was little to encourage one to battle with the rude conditions which existed on every hand, but with the true pioneer spirit he steadfastly adhered to his purpose to make a home for himself and family, first erecting a small log cabin. In the course of time, after a portion of the land had been cleared and the land cultivated, this rude structure gave place to a more commodious double log cabin, and here, and in the home previously mentioned, all of the four sons were born and reared. Some idea of the scarcity of neighbors at the time Mr. Marlow came to this section, may be gathered from the fact that when he erected his first house there were only two or three cabins in Rushville, now a thriving village, no settlers between his cabin and Rushville, and but few between his farm and Quincy. Mr. Marlow's first purchase of land consisted of 130 acres, part of the land now included in the old homestead, and in partnership with his brother, Alfred, he purchased another farm of the same size, which they operated together for a number of years. By purchases Hanson Marlow added to his original acreage until he had 160 acres, to which he supposed he had a clear title, but his claim to ownership was disputed and he was obliged to pay for the land again. As his means permitted he purchased other land adjoining, until at one time he owned 520 acres. At the time of purchase the greater part of the land was heavily timbered, but with the assistance of his sons he cleared away the timber and underbrush, and in time waving fields of grain were to be seen in their stead. As his children grew to maturity, he gave to each a share of the home farm. The eldest son, Henry, is a resident of Sullivan, Ind.; Hanson, who is now deceased, married Miss Nancy Davis, by whom he had a son and daughter, both of whom are now deceased; the other son, besides Levi S., is John W., who owns and cultivates a farm in Camden Township. The mother of these children passed away in 1860, and some years later the father was united in marriage with Mrs. Nancy Green, who was left a widow about one year after her marriage, and she, too, is now deceased. The death of Hanson Marlow occurred 1863 and was deeply felt in the community where he had made his home for so many years and toward whose upbuilding he had done so much. Throughout his life he adhered rigidly to the religious teachings of his parents, and was an ardent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. During the early days, before a house of worship had been erected, his home was the stopping place for the circuit riders who came to minister to the people. Hospitality was one of his chief characteristics, a quality which he inherited from a long line of Southern ancestors.

Levi S. Marlow was born in the double log cabin on the old homestead, August 16, 1844, and all the school training he received was in the district school at Camden, three miles from his home. As soon as he was large enough he began to aid in the duties which fall to the lot of every farmer's son, his father at that time owning 520 acres, well stocked with cattle. Until he was thirty years old he worked continuously on the farm, but at this age he took up work at the plasterer's trade, building cisterns principally, and also to some extent, worked at the carpenter's trade. Among his accomplishments in the latter trade may be mentioned the First Methodist Episcopal Church, South, known at that time as the Union Chapel. He gave the ground on the which the edifice was erected, $25 in cash, hewed the frame, and in addition gave sixty day's work. The services of the church and Sunday-school have been maintained without interruption since the church home was built, church services being held every two weeks, and Sunday-school, class and prayer meetings every Sunday. Though not a member of the church, Mr. Marlow is a liberal giver to its charities and is especially active in Sunday school work, and since its organization has been treasurer of the Sunday school at Camden. Many of the finest houses in Camden stand as monuments to Mr. Marlow's skill and ingenuity, and taken all in all, he has been a prominent factor in the march of progress in this part of Schuyler County.

Mr. Marlow's marriage, in West Quincy, Mo., January 6, 1865, united him with Margaretta Rice, a native of Columbus, Ohio, and a daughter of John and Rebecca Rice, both natives of Pennsylvania, whence they removed to Ohio, and still later to Missouri. Their last home was in Illinois, where both passed away, the father dying in 1863. Of the ten children born to Mr. and Mrs. Marlow, Henry A., a farmer in Camden Township, married Mary E. Terrell; Esther became the wife of James Lawson, a farmer of Bainbridge Township, and had two children, one of whom, Verna, is living; the next died in infancy; George W., by his marriage with Mary C. Corsey, became the father of three children of whom one died in infancy; Lena is now four years old and Guy is a farmer in this locality; Julietta and Jeanetta were twins, the latter being killed by a runaway horse and the former being the wife of William Lawson, by whom she has one son, Ray; Ida May, the wife of Thomas Fitch, has two children, Guy and Carl Frederick; Fannie, the wife of Elmer Carter, of Gray, Stevens County, Wash., has five children—Harold, Emory, Lewis, Ernest and Opal Olive, three having died in infancy; Eva M., was first married to Emery Calvert, by whom she had two children—Mabel and Myrtle Ruth; by her marriage with Mead A. Clayton, she has three children—Roscoe, Emory and Lorena; Carl L., a farmer in Camden Township, married Nettie Elliott. Mrs. Margaretta Marlow died November 18, 1887, leaving to mourn her loss a family of devoted children, and many friends who had learned to love her for her many noble christian virtues. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Marlow was subsequently married to Mary E. Elder, who was born in Buena Vista, Ill., a daughter of Robert and Luanna (Allen) Elder. While she was a mere child Mrs. Marlow was left an orphan, and was reared and tenderly cared for by Mrs. Margaret Eifert, with whom she remained until her marriage.

Socially, Mr. Marlow is a Mason, belonging to the lodge at Camden. Six times he has been elected to the office of Justice of the Peace, serving in this capacity for twenty-four years. Three times he has been elected Collector, and has also been thrice elected Assessor. Mr. Marlow's long retention in office is an excellent indication of his fitness for the trusts in question, and an unmistakable evidence of his popularity in the community.

McCABE, John.—Since a comparatively early period in the history of the township and city of Rushville, Schuyler County, Ill., brickmaking has been an important industry in that locality. The pioneer settlers were succeeded by men who not only profited by the experience of their predecessors, but who themselves established a standard of achievement for those who should succeed them. In the early 'fifties was witnessed a decided impetus towards brickmaking on a large scale, and a young and sturdy element was introduced in the person of John McCabe, then twenty-two years of age, who was destined to spend at least half a century in the manufacture of this necessary building material.

John McCabe, Sr., father of the retired brick manufacturer of Rushville, whose name furnishes the caption of this sketch, was born in Pennsylvania, and when quite young, was taken by his parents to Ohio, where he was reared on a farm and where he learned the blacksmith's trade. He married Mary Hevel, a native of Ohio, and settled on a farm in Coshocton County, in that State, where he combined farming and blacksmithing, and where his son and namesake, John, was born March 11, 1828. In 1844 the elder McCabe removed to a farm in Marion County, Ind., and three years later settled in Woodland, Ill., where he followed his trade until he became a soldier in the Civil War. He enlisted in the Sixty-second Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and his son, John, enlisted in 1862, in Company A, Eighty-fourth Illinois Regiment. The father, after a year's service, fell in the Battle of Pittsburg Landing, and another name was added to the list of soldier heroes. A desolated home in Woodland bespoke the dependence which had been placed upon him, and it became the duty of those still remaining under the family roof to contribute their best to the maintenance of the family.

While still in his "teens," John McCabe, Jr., began to work in a brickyard, and because he was observant and industrious, succeeded in learning the business in three or four seasons. At the age of twenty-two years, he established a brick yard at Littleton, Schuyler County, and two years later, removed his yard to Macomb, Ill., where he operated it until his enlistment for the war. In 1866 he came to Rushville, and in 1879, added to his kilns the machinery for the manufacture of tile. His enterprise resulted in the constant growth of his business, and he retired with a competence, and with credit for having materially promoted an increasingly important industry. For sixty-five years he was actively engaged in brick-making, selling out in 1904, since which time he has enjoyed the quiet repose so richly his due. He was married, in 1851, to Mary Clark, of Iudiana, and his family consists of four children, James, Arthur, Howard C. and Cora, two children having died in infancy. Mr. McCabe is a deeply religious man, and for many years has been identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

In 1863 Mr. McCabe joined the A. F. & A. M. at Macomb, Ill., where he was spending the period of his furlough, having been wounded at the Battle of Chickamauga, and being then obliged to use crutches. He has since taken all of the degrees in the Masonic Order, up to that of Knight Templar, and for thirty consecutive years was treasurer of the Blue Lodge, resigning this office against the wishes of his fellow members. No man stands higher in the estimation of the people of Rushville than John McCabe, the soldier, brickmaker and old-time Mason.

McCORMICK, David.—May, 1907, marked the fiftieth anniversary of the arrival of David McCormick upon the farm in Rushville Township, Schuyler County, Ill., which has since been his home. He was twenty-five years of age when he thus shaped his course into independent channels, but he was no stranger to the locality, for in 1836 he had arrived in Rushville with his parents, from Troy, N. Y., where he was born February 17, 1832. He was of rugged Scotch ancestry, descended from men who had the courage to fight for a good cause or invade the wilderness in search of homes and fortunes. Both his grandfather, Samuel McCormick, and his father, Andrew McCormick, were born in Scotland, and came to America in time for the grandfather to shoulder his musket in the Revolutionary War. Andrew McCormick devoted his active life to farming, and his death occurred in 1840, four years after his arrival in Schuyler County. His wife, who was formerly Jane Hill of New York, survived him until 1860.

In his youth, David McCormick had only such opportunities as he created for himself. To be able to attend the district school was a privilege sufficiently rare to be appreciated, and inspired in him a longing for further knowledge, to be acquired during the greater leisure of his mature years. While still in his teens he learned the cooper's trade, which he followed several years in connection with farming, but which he long since abandoned. The farm purchased by him in May, 1857, had some improvements, but these have been replaced for the most part with those better adapted to modern needs. The McCormick farm combined large money making possibilities, with the comforts and refinements possible only under the most favorable country conditions. It gives evidence of the perseverance and good judgment of its owner in its every department, and speaks volumes for the possession of qualities which go to the making of a substantial and prosperous farmer.

On June 4, 1868, Mr. McCormick married Margaret J. Hillis, a native of Schuyler County, Ill., and of this union there are six children, namely: Carrie J., Scarlet C., Albert H., John A., Mary J., and N. F. Mr. McCormick is a Republican in politics, but has never aspired to political honors. His life has been a quiet and uneventful one, blessed with a good share of prosperity and happiness, and devoted in all ways to the well-being of his family and to the interests of the community of which he is a respected citizen.

MC CREERY, L. J.—Almost from time immemorial agriculture and education have been regarded as the bulwarks of community existence. As man progressed towards a larger usefulness and greater happiness through a simplification of the problems of life, these factors draw nearer and nearer together, until the establishment of an ideal country enterprise presupposes a trained and well adjusted mental equipment. It is to these fundamental occupations that L. J. McCreery has devoted attention during the greater part of his active life, and as an agriculturist and educator he has won that recognition due an earnest and painstaking worker. Mr. McCreery was born in Birmingham Township, Schuyler County, Ill., November 21, 1857, a son of William Thomas, and a grandson of Lewis McCreery, both natives of Ireland.

William Thomas McCreery was born in Ireland in 1836, and in 1845, when eight years old, came to America with his parents, and located on a farm in Birmingham Township. He had the advantages of the average country-reared boy of the Central West, and finally, through marriage, united his own with another and still earlier pioneer family of Schuyler County. His wife, formerly Esta Farr, was a daughter of Jacob Farr, who moved to Schuyler County from his native State of Ohio before the birth of his daughter. Mr. McCreery was not only successful in general farming and stock-raising, but he became prominent in politics, and held many offices of local importance. For three terms he served as Representative in the Legislature (1876-80 and 1888-90) and for several years was Chairman of the Board of Trustees of Huntsville, Birmingham Township. His death occurred in 1901, his wife having predeceased him in 1886. He was a man of strong character and decided opinions, and his identification with the county and township redounded to its permanent well being.

L. J. McCreery was educated in the country schools, at the Augusta high school, and Knox College, Galesburg, Ill. He has always made his home on a farm, and for eighteen years was identified with educational affairs, for fourteen years as a teacher, and for four years as Superintendent of Schools of Schuyler County, to which office he was elected in 1898. In 1884 he was united in marriage to Almada Burwood, daughter of Philip and Lucinda (Hood) Burwood. Philip Burwood was born in Germany in 1829, and in 1831 came to America with his parents, locating presumably in Pennsylvania. He arrived in Schuyler County at an early day, married in 1855, and spent his active life in the pursuit of farming. To Mr. and Mrs. McCreery has been born a son, Chester Ray. Mr. McCreery is social in his tendencies, and is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Modern Woodmen of America. He is a Democrat in politics, and in religion a Presbyterian. The present high standard of education maintained in the public schools of Schuyler County is in large measure due to the untiring efforts of Mr. McCreery. He is no mere intellectual visionary, but a practical, energetic, far-sighted educator, in touch with the times and its demands, and with the hopes and possibilities of that great predominating middle class which derives its working equipment from the field of human equality known as the public schools.

MC GRATH FAMILY.—Among the older residents of Schuyler County are the McGrath family. James McGrath came from Pennsylvania to Illinois in 1857 accompanied by his family consisting of his wife and nine children—six sons and three daughters—locating at Doddsville, McDonough County, just north of the Schuyler County line. Here he remained until 1865, when he removed to Schuyler County, settling in the southwest part of the northwest quarter of Littleton Township, which has been the family home to the present time. His children all grew to manhood and womanhood in McDonough and Schuyler Counties, and four of his sons became soldiers of the Union Army during the Civil War. Of these, Lloyd was killed at Vicksburg, Miss., during the siege of that place, and John was wounded at Chickamunga, as a consequence of which he finally died. One remarkable thing in the history of the McGrath family is the fact that, during a residence of fifty-one years in the same community, none of its members have ever been engaged in a law-suit, either as plaintiff or defendant.

MC GRATH, Thomas C., one of the oldest living residents of Schuyler County, Ill., which has been his home for more than half a century, and an honored veteran of the Civil War, is residing on his farm in Section 5, Littleton Township, an object of sincere respect and warm regard to the large number of his fellow-citizens who are familiar with his worthy traits of character. He is a member of the family which can boast of the high distinction of having given four sons to the defense of the Union in its mighty struggle for existence, all of whom were wounded, one being killed and another dying as a result of wounds received in the conflict. Mr. McGrath was born in Franklin County, Pa., receiving his early education in the district schools of that locality. He is a son of James W. and Barbara (Jones) McGrath, natives of that State and county. His paternal grandfather, John McGrath, was a native of County Tipperary, Ireland, and the latter's wife, Sarah (Collins) McGrath, was born in Connecticut. The grandparents on the maternal side, Joseph Jones and wife, were Pennsylvanians, born in Lancaster County. James W. McGrath and Barbara Jones were married in the vicinity of Mercersburg, Pa., in July, 1833. There the father followed his trade of blacksmithing, but in 1857 journeyed with his family, by wagon, to Pittsburg, and thence by boat on the Ohio, Mississippi and Illinois Rivers, to Schuyler County, Ill., stopping at the village of Frederick. Having friends in Doddsville, McDonough County, he located there, working at his trade until 1865, then moving to a farm in the northwest quarter of Section 5, Littleton Township, Schuyler County, which he had purchased. It was wholly a prairie tract, and one of the first pieces of land of this kind to be cultivated in Schuyler County. James W. McGrath died January 4, 1892, at the age of seventy-eight years, five months and fourteen days, and his worthy wife passed away March 1, 1895, aged seventy-three years, one month and sixteen days.

James W. and Barbara Jones McGrath were the parents of nine children, namely: John H., Jacob, Thomas C., William C., Joseph V., James B., Elhara, Sarah E., and Jennie, B. John, the eldest, married Eliza Chandler, who was born in Ohio, and they are the parents of two sons and two daughters. He enlisted in September, 1862, in Company G, Seventy-third Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was wounded in the right hip at the Battle of Chickamauga, taken prisoner, and confined fourteen days in a field hospital. Then he was paroled and sent to a St. Louis hospital, staying there two months. After this, he was detailed for duty in charge of prisoners at St. Louis, and was discharged from the service four months later. The wound received at Chickamauga finally resulted in his death. Jacob died in Pennsylvania, at the age of eighteen months. Lloyd A., born September 20, 1840, enlisted in the fall of 1862, in Company A, Tenth Regiment, Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and was killed at Vicksburg, June 26, 1863. William C., born July 31, 1843, is living on the old home place. Joseph V., born October 27, 1844, married Nancy Gregg, a native of McDonough County, Ill., and is the father of one child, William, of Ringgold County, Iowa. He enlisted in December, 1863, in the Eighth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving through the war. He was wounded in the right side by a rifle ball, at Fort Blakely, near Mobile, Ala., by reason of which he draws a pension. After the war he went to Kansas City, Mo., where he now resides. James B., born February 20, 1846, lives on the homestead; Elhara, born July 1, 1849, lives at Cimarron, Kan., and is the widow of Robert J. McGinnis; Sarah E., born December 10, 1851, became the wife of David Werents, and died in September, 1892; and Jennie B., born May 10, 1854, is living on the home place. After the death of their parents, all the surviving men-

bers came home to live, James B., owning half of the property, and the remainder belonging to William C. and Jennie B.

Thomas C. McGrath, after his school days were over, assisted in the work of the paternal farm, remaining at home until the outbreak of the War of the Rebellion. On May 24, 1861, he enlisted at Rushville, Ill., in Company G, Sixteenth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, continuing in service until the termination of hostilities. Since then he has been successfully engaged in farming in Section 5, Littleton Township. In politics, Mr. McGrath has been long an adherent of the Republican party, and for six years, filled the office of Township Assessor with ability and fidelity. He is also a member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

McGRAW, James Thomas, who follows farming in Schuyler County, Ill., on an extensive scale, owning a large amount of land, and being, moreover, one of the most prominent and influential citizens in his locality, is a resident of Section 27, Littleton Township, where he is known and respected by all. Mr. McGraw was born in Pendleton County, Ky., October 30, 1857, and is a son of Matthew and Julia (Biggs) McGraw, both natives of that State and County, the birth of the father occurring November 19, 1834, and that of the mother, January 11, 1842. The maternal grandfather was Thomas Biggs, also a native of Kentucky. In April, 1861, Matthew McGraw and his family moved to Illinois, settling in Brooklyn Township, Schuyler County, and living for two years on rented land. The father then bought 160 acres of partly improved land, on which he completed the improvements and farmed four years, afterwards disposing of it, and purchasing 160 acres in Buena Vista Township, in the same county, also partially improved. When he had further improved this place he added 200 acres to it, 60 acres of which were under the plow. Selling the farm to his son, James, in 1891, he went, in March, of that year, to Audrain County, Mo., where he bought some land, and also a house and lot in Centralia, Boone County. In 1904 he sold the Audrain County farm, and bought another, of 80 acres, in Boone County. He now lives in Centralia, Mo., where he owns considerable property, the management of which occupies his time. James T. McGraw remained with his parents until he reached the age of 26 years, his education being received in the district schools of Buena Vista Township. After his marriage, he located on a farm of 115 acres in that township. To this he subsequently made additions, increasing his holdings to 860 acres in Sections 5 and 8, 300 acres of which is tillable land. There he lived until the fall of 1900, when he moved to a farm of 80 acres in Section 27, Littleton Township. In 1903, he purchased 120 acres in Section 22, and in March, 1907, became the owner of the southwest quarter of that section. This land is all in one body, and of the highest agricultural quality. Besides general farming, he devotes considerable attention to raising horses, Shorthorn cattle and Poland-China hogs.

On January 17, 1884, Mr. McGraw was united in marriage with Cornelia Nelson, who was born in Littleton Township, November 7, 1856, receiving her education in the district schools in the vicinity of her home, and in the Macomb Normal School. Mrs. McGraw is a daughter of Teel and Jane (Little) Nelson, natives of Pennsylvania. Her paternal grandparents were Henry and Mary Ann (Teel) Nelson, born in Ohio, and her grandparents on the maternal side, Robert and Eliza (Cunningham) Little, were natives of Ireland. Five children blessed this union, as follows: Anna Lois, born October 31, 1884, now the wife of William Lenhart, of Buena Vista Township; Ruth E., born February 1, 1886, who married Roy D. Winters, of Scotland Township, McDonough County, Ill.; Vera M., born March 9, 1890, who is at home; Beulah A., born October 28, 1894; and Julia M., born October 30, 1897.

Politically, Mr. McGraw is identified with the Democratic party, and wields a strong influence in local politics. While a resident of Buena Vista Township, he served one term as Collector, and has held the office of Assessor one year in Littleton Township. In April, 1906, he was elected Supervisor of the latter township for a term of two years. He is one of the leading farmers of Schuyler County, and in connection with the civic affairs of the community, maintains a high standing.

McKEE, William (deceased).—Out in the open twilight, within sight of the old and loved ancestral home, and within the shadow of the trees that he had fostered for more than seventy years, the long, stirring life of William McKee came to an end December 17, 1897. He died almost on the site of the place where, as a lad, nearly three score years before, he had worked to assist in the erection of a home in what was then a wilderness. He loved the scenes of his childhood, and after he had satisfied that intense longing for a stirring life, so readily vouchsafed to the youth of the early 'thirties and 'forties, he returned to the home of his father, and there, amid its peace and quiet, honored by all, he enjoyed the well-earned fruits of his early labor. Although he there lived the uneventful life of a farmer, he retained to the last what may be called the pioneer disposition, being in spirit and habits an unaffected man of the people. While he made no religious pretensions, he was blessed with that kindly spirit which prompted him to assist those in want without embarrassing them with a sense of obligation. In his last days he was cheered by the companionship of the aged wife and his daughter and only surviving child, who is now the wife of C. L. DeWitt, of Rushville, Ill.

It was in April, 1826, that Mr. McKee was brought to Schuyler County. He was born in Crawford County, Ind., January 22, 1813. His father came here in the preceding year, and the rich and attractive country of Central Illinois had induced him to seek a home in the new, wild region. He returned to Indiana, and in April, 1826, brought his family here. In the party besides the family who came to Schuyler County, were Joel Tullis, Charles Hammond, Isaac Linder, Vincent Westfall and James Thompson. Having purchased for $100, 160 acres of land in Section 18, Rushville Township, the father, with the assistance of his thirteen-year old son, commenced to prepare the way for his wife and six children. The site of Rushville, almost adjoining their place, had been selected as the county-seat in the preceding February, but was still but a town on paper. Mr. McKee staked his claim not on the clear, fertile prairie which stretched for miles around, but along the wooded banks of the creek. The log cabin which the father and son erected was of the pioneer type, with trimmed logs for the walls and the roof of clapboards. Mr. McKee went back to Indiana shortly afterwards, but soon returned, bringing with him the tools and machinery necessary in the construction of a grist mill, and finally setting up a band-mill run by horse-power. He developed a thriving business, people coming even from Rock Island to have their grain ground. There was also a blacksmith's shop in the near neighborhood, and both establishments did a thriving business from the start. Sac and Fox Indians moved farther north with the coming of the early settlers, but along Spoon River, in Fulton County, there remained a large band, members of which often came to the mill and blacksmith shop. They were lazy but peaceable, and gave the pioneers of this region little trouble. On the McKee farm is still to be seen a silent memorial of aboriginal days in the form of an Indian trail, which may be traced through a beautiful stretch of woods, once a favorite rendezvous of the dusky sons of the forest and prairie. Mr. McKee not only operated his grist mill, but soon after putting it in operation, constructed a saw-mill, in the early 'thirties erecting a dam across Sugar Creek and operating the latter by water-power. There were several mill sites on that stream, the McKee dam being located at what is known as the Main Ford, where the creek is crossed by the road from Rushville to Browning.

In those days one need not go far abroad in search of thrilling adventures, and the hardy race of pioneers who battled against such odds in order to found and maintain their homes have their reward in the permanent extension of American civilization and the profound gratitude of their immediate descendants. The McKee family experienced all the adventures and suffered all the hardships of pioneer life. Its members struggled through the awful winter of the deep snow (1831) when the level prairie was buried four to five feet deep, and the ravines were filled to the hilltops.

William McKee, the son, was the last of the one hundred and fifty volunteers in Schuyler County to answer Governor Reynold's call for a force to drive Black Hawk and his murderous band beyond the bounds of Illinois. During the winter of 1831-32 the crafty chief had mustered his warriors on the Iowa side of the Mississippi for the purpose of invading this State, and the alarmed settlers had called upon the Governor for protection. The one hundred and fifty volunteers from Schuyler County gathered at Rushville in April, 1832, and were eloquently addressed by William Marinshall before starting for Beardstown, Cass County, the general point of rendezvous. They had furnished their own arms and equipments. Mr. McKee, who was then nineteen years of age, having been furnished by his father with a wagon and a team of horses, Abraham Lincoln, with his company, encamped over night half a mile north of Rushville. The entire force of the State finally marched toward Rock Island, and later, in what is now Ogle County, met the disaster known as "Stillman's defeat." In this engagement eleven whites and eight Indians were killed, and after the battle, Mr. McKee drove over the field and carried six of the dead soldiers to a place where the bodies were safe from the danger of mutilation.

In 1839, because of ill-health, Mr. McKee went to that vast northwestern region then known as Oregon, where he remained for a year, exploring the country and regaining his strength. He returned home, one of the main incidents of his trip being the formation of an intimate friendship with Dr. Marcus Whitman, who saved that part of the country now including Oregon, Washington, and Idaho, to the United States. During his first trip to the Oregon country Mr. McKee was employed by him in a grist mill for about six months. In the winter of 1842-43 Dr. Whitman rode from Oregon to Washington, a distance of 3,000 miles, for the purpose of arousing the interest of statesmen at the National capital in the vast natural wealth of the Oregon region, and thwarting the attempt of the British Hudson Bay Company to exclude American settlers and make it a province of Great Britain. He was so far successful in his mission as to receive the sanction of the United States Government in his project of leading an emigrant train of 875 hardy American pioneers into the coveted territory. This bold and wise action undoubtedly saved this grand region as a part of the public domain of the United States. In November, 1847, this patriotic and intrepid man was murdered, with his wife and twelve other members of his household, by the Cayuse Indians.

In the early part of the year just mentioned, Mr. McKee, with his brother, Joel, and Joel Tullis and the latter's family, started overland for the far-distant Oregon country, with which the first named was already quite familiar. The trip was filled with hardship and sorrow, especially to Mr. Tullis, two of whose children died on the way and were buried along the Indian trails where they happened to breathe away their young lives. Soon after their arrival the settlers of the country were stirred profoundly by the Whitman tragedy, and a call was issued to quell the Indian uprising, of which this was the leading event. Mr. McKee was naturally one of the first to offer his services, and although he was in the thick of the three months' campaign which comprised the active part of the conflict with the Indians, he escaped without injury. From Oregon, in 1849, he went to California, where for three years he tasted of the feverish life of the early gold-miners, but in 1852 returned to the old homestead in Schuyler County, and seemed never again to wish to leave its atmosphere of peace and contentment. For forty-five years thereafter he lived a quiet life of integrity, industry and broad usefulness, and finally passed away at the age of eighty-four, without a moment of pain—as a candle light, which quietly burns to the socket and expires.

In 1853 Mr. McKee was united in marriage to Sarah C. Wilnot, and five daughters were born to their union: Mrs. Henry Ilite, Mrs. Samuel D. Wheelhouse, Mary C. and Meta McKee, and Mrs. Cyrus L. DeWitt. (See sketch of Cyrus L. DeWitt in another portion of this history.) Mrs. McKee and her daughter, Mrs. DeWitt, are the only surviving members of this honored pioneer family, and, having removed from the old homestead, the venerable widow is living in honored retirement with her daughter in Rushville. The former still owns the beautiful farm, which was the scene of her early joys and sorrows, and which she so faithfully shared with her honored husband. After coming to Schuyler County, four more children (making ten in all) were added to the family of the elder McKee, and of this number none is now surviving.

McLAREN, Harry E.—The Schuyler County Herald was established at Rushville, Ill., February 28, 1901, by Harry E. McLaren, a young man whose journalistic experience has been further enriched by the publication of the Astoria Argus for ten years. The Herald maintains a Democratic policy, and in general trend, is a vehicle and moulder of the most advanced public opinion.

Mr. McLaren was born in Astoria, Fulton County, Ill., June 3, 1874, and comes of a family of which much reasonably might be expected. He is a son of Robert F. and Amanda (Lane) McLaren, natives of Fulton and Schuyler Counties, respectively, of whom the former enjoys the distinction of having been one of the most prominent and public spirited men of Astoria for almost half a century. He was Justice of the Peace for thirty-two years, and during that time united two hundred and twenty-seven couples in marriage. For eighteen years he was a notary Public, for eleven years Township Clerk, for six years City Clerk, Assessor for two terms, and member of the Board of Education for many years. In 1903 he became a member of the retired colony of Rushville.

Harry E. McLaren was educated in the public schools of Astoria and Drake University of Iowa. He began at the bottom round of the journalistic ladder by learning the printer's trade, gradually making his way to the front office of the Astoria Argus, over whose editorial destiny he presided for ten years. Mr. McLaren is prominent socially, and is identified with the Masons, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Modern Woodmen of America, and other fraternities. His personality is pleasing, and he has the tact and good judgment which keeps the wide awake newspaper man on good terms with himself and the world in general.

McMILLEN, Gilbert.—The enviable standing of Mr. McMillen among the people of Oakland Township, Schuyler County, Ill., where he was born and where he has made his lifelong home, may be appreciated from the statement that six consecutive times they have chosen him to represent them on the Board of County Supervisors. Though elected by the Democrats as their nominee, he is popular with representatives of all parties, and during his twelve years of service on the board he was a staunch supporter of progressive enterprises contributory to the progress of the county, while at the same time aiming by his influence and ballot to conserve the interests of the tax-payers.

The genealogy of the McMillen family can be traced back to Scotland, but several generations have lived in the United States. John McMillen, a native of Ohio, born in 1815, came to the then unknown frontier of Illinois during early manhood, and in Schuyler County, in 1843, he married Margaret Pittenger, who was born in Virginia in 1823, and came with her parents to Illinois, settling in Schuyler County in 1836. Since that time she has remained at the old homestead, now operated by her son, Gilbert. Her husband died in 1888, at the age of seventy-three, after a long and useful life devoted to agricultural pursuits. They were the parents of eleven children, but three of these died in early life. Eight are now living, namely: Sarah, who married William H. Baxter, a farmer in Littleton Township; Mary, the widow of William Billingsley, living in Rushville Township on a farm; Belle, who married William Bly, a farmer near Macomb, Ill.; Nicholas, of Macomb; Margaret, at home; Gilbert; Henry, who is now in the West; and Ollie, wife of Charles Vertree, station agent at Elmwood, Ills., for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway Company.

The McMillen homestead, on Section 26, Oakland Township, where Gilbert McMillen now resides, is his birthplace, the date of his birth being January 1, 1857. During boyhood he attended the district school near the farm. On December 23, 1896, he was united in marriage with Mira, daughter of Peter Rose, an early settler of Schuyler County, having removed hither from Michigan. Mr. and Mrs. McMillen have four children, namely: Harry, born January 20, 1898; Phoebe, January 29, 1900; Mildred, July 2, 1901; and Mabel, May 25, 1903. The family attend the Methodist Church, of which Mrs. McMillen is an active member. While devoting himself with assiduous care to stock raising and general farming, Mr. McMillen has found leisure to participate in public affairs. He has been connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America, and has been a staunch worker in the interests of the Democratic party. Besides serving as Supervisor, as before stated, he has filled the positions of Collector and Assessor of his township, and in every relation of life, has proved a patriotic and progressive citizen.

MEAD, Dr. Mary Ward, a prominent practicing physician of Camden, Schuyler County, Ill., was born in her present place of residence, October 2, 1872, a daughter of Jas. N. and Martha (Parrish) Ward, the former a native of Camden, Ill., and the latter of Macoupin County, Ill. Her parents were married in Schuyler County, and the father, after pursuing the life of a farmer, is now living in retirement with his daughter, Dr. Mary Ward Mead, the wife and mother having died July 16, 1887. Joseph N. Ward, the paternal grandfather of the subject of this sketch, who was a pioneer settler of Schuyler County, was a native of Kentucky. The father, James N. Ward, is a Republican in politics, though not a politician in the sense of being an office-seeker, and has been a life-long member of the Christian Church.

In her childhood and youth, Mrs. Mead attended the primary school at Nebo, near her birthplace and later, the public school at Huntsville, Schuyler County. She began her professional career as a trained nurse in the Mercy Hospital at Keokuk, Iowa, during this period having charge of laparotomy cases, the treatment of which, with a single exception, proved successful. On October 2, 1889, she was married at Huntsville, Ill., to Dr. Richard Homer Mead, whose biography appears on another page in this connection. After her marriage, she studied medicine under the tutelage of her husband, and as the latter became less active, proved a useful assistant in his extended practice, her previous training as a professional nurse, qualifying her to enter upon a collegiate course. She then attended the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Keokuk, Ia., from which she graduated with high honors in the Class of 1897. After graduation, she returned to her home at Camden, Ill., and engaged in active practice in which she has met with marked success, both in growth of patronage and its extension in wider fields, her reputation as a practitioner having extended into adjoining counties. She is a member of the Schuyler County Medical Society and the International Medical Society, and fraternally, is identified with the Order of the Eastern Star and the Royal Neighbors, being Martha of the former and Camp Physician of the latter.

Dr. and Mrs. Mead are the parents of three children, namely: Miss Clara Briscoe, born April 26, 1891; Miss Andrew Jackson, born December 18, 1893; and Hughes Barrow, born April 10, 1898. Each of the older children has received a superior education, the daughters being grad-mates of the High School, and having begun their college course in September, 1905, Clara intending to study medicine, and her sister, to become a nurse. They are especially well trained in music, often being called upon to take part in public entertainments, in which they have been remarkably successful. Both parents and children are members of the Christian Church. The heads of this family, engaged in a like professional task, are living harmonious and useful lives, in which they are able, while co-operating with each other, to benefit a wide circle of patrons.

MEAD, Richard Homer, M. D.—Barely do men in the medical profession express the many sidedness and versatility found in Dr. Richard Homer Mead, an eminent practitioner of Camden, Ill., and known also as a soldier during the Civil War, as a writer of more than average force and elegance, as a politician of integrity and wide usefulness, and as a promoter of education, sanitation, fraternities and general community interests. Dr. Mead is a native of Schuyler County, and was born January 16, 1847, a son of Andrew J. and Mary (Briscoe) Mead, long residents of Huntsville, in the same county.

Primarily, Dr. Mead was educated in the public schools of Huntsville, but owing to interruptions in his youth, his higher training has been largely self acquired. As was the case with thousands of the boys of the land, his principal and most developing experience was the Civil War, which broke over the country when he had attained to barely sixteen years. Enlisting in Company K, Eighth Iowa Cavalry, at Camp Roberts, Davenport, Iowa, he went with his company to Nashville, Tenn.; and during the winter of 1863-4 was on duty in the mountains of Tennessee. With the coming of spring his company was on the left wing of General McCook's cavalry, and with Sherman's army advanced on Atlanta. After engaging in fighting for one hundred days the regiment returned northward, and was the first to oppose Hood's crossing the Tennessee river, an effort which resulted in defeat, although later they prevented his advance at Duck River. After the Battle of Nashville they continued to pursue the wily Confederate general to the Tennessee river. In the spring of 1865, Croxton's brigade became detached from Wilson's corps, successfully fighting the Battle of Selma, but was unable to return to the command and became known as the "lost brigade." It fought its way and roamed at will over Alabama, being in two mountain engagements. After the surrender of Lee, neither the opposing Federal cavalry nor Croxton's command had any knowledge of the event until two weeks after its occurrence. Later the regiment was sent in pursuit of Jefferson Davis to Macon, Ga., and August 28, 1865, Mr. Mead was mustered out of the service, having proved himself a soldier of rare courage and endurance. He was taken prisoner on the McCook raid in the rear of Atlanta, but escaped in a few hours. Not so his fellow brethren at arms, for fully half of the company died in Andersonville prison.

Returning to his home in Illinois, Dr. Mead continued the study of medicine begun before he had donned the uniform of the Union soldier. His first professional instructor was his father, and in November, 1865, he entered the College of Physicians & Surgeons at Keokuk, Iowa, graduating therefrom in the Class of 1867. Locating in Huntsville, Ill., he practiced until 1872 with his father, going then to Texas, where, for five years, he was connected with the I. & G. N. Railroad Company. During 1878-9 he attended the St. Louis Medical College, and then resumed his practice at Huntsville, which he continued until 1884. Although his educational opportunities seemed not to warrant the experiment, the doctor applied to the civil service commission for examination, and upon passing in the class at Burlington, Ill., he was appointed pension clerk at Washington, D. C., August 18, 1885, being the fifteenth man from Illinois to pass the examination. March 2, 1885, he became a permanent member of Class 1, and in October, of the same year, he was promoted to class 2. On April 24, 1886, he was detailed to the field as special examiner in Maine, New Hampshire and New York, and December 28, 1886, resigned his position, but being an honorably discharged soldier, he can re-enter the service without examination whenever inclination dictates.

Returning to Huntsville, the doctor engaged in a general medical and surgical practice until locating in Camden. He is one of the best known and most highly reputed practitioners in his part of the county. In spite of his other interests has never allowed ought to interfere with a conscientious discharge of professional obligations, and cold, heat or storm have never been known to keep him within the shelter of his home when duty called. He is the genial friend and dependable adviser in hundreds of families, and has presided at the entrances and exits of many of the foremost people of the community. He has left no stone unturned to advance his usefulness and add to his opportunities, and has been a constant attendant at professional conventions, including that of the National Columbian Medical Association at Washington, D. C., in 1884-5-6.

The doctor was physician of the Illinois Southern Penitentiary for four years, and served two years as Assistant Superintendent of the State Insane Asylum at Chester.

The marriage of Dr. Mead and Mary, daughter of James N. and Martha (Parrish) Ward, occurred October 3, 1889, and this union resulted in two daughters, Clara Briscoe, Andrew Jackson, and a son, Hughes Barrow. A biographical record of Dr. Mary Mead appears on another page in this volume. Dr. Mead is an ardent fraternalist, and is identified with Huntsville Lodge No. 465, A. F. & A. M.; Augusta Chapter No. 78, R. A. M.; Almoner Commandery No. 32, K. T.; and Cyclone Lodge No. 635, I. O. O. F., of which he is a charter member and one of the organizers. He is prominent in Grand Army circles, always attends local and national encampments, and is a member of George A. Brown Post, No. 417.

He is a consistent and active member of the Christian Church of Camden. In politics he is a strong Republican, and was a delegate from Schuyler County to the famous "deadlock" State Convention of 1904, supporting Gov. Yates to the end.

MESSERER, Anthony (deceased), one of the best known men and most successful farmers among the early settlers of Frederick Township, Schuyler County, Ill., whose career reflected lasting credit upon the home of his adoption, was born in Germany in 1796. Of his parentage and family history, all records have been lost in the lapse of time. Together with an elder brother, Anthony crossed the Atlantic when six years old, the brother being seized with yellow fever on the passage, from which he died, his body being buried at sea. The young lad, thus left alone, completed the voyage to a port on the West India Islands, and was bound out to a Spaniard. There he stayed until he was twenty-one years old, when his Spanish master set him free. After traveling for some time he finally came to the United States, settling in Pennsylvania. In the West Indies, he had been employed on a large plantation in charge of negroes, and on arriving in this country he applied himself to farm work. Subsequently, he journeyed westward to St. Louis and Peoria, and later to Schuyler County, Ill., where about 1834 he entered up a tract of government land in Frederick Township. But one dwelling had been built in the locality where he settled, and Indians still lingered about, wild game also being plentiful. For marketing, it was necessary for him to make trips to Beardstown.

In Pennsylvania, Mr. Messerer made the acquaintance of Margaretta Weaver, a native of Harrisburg, that State, whom he married about 1833, and after spending some time in Peoria, Ill., and later in St. Louis, in 1834, settled on a farm in Frederick Township, Schuyler County, there being then but one house in Frederick. He there bought 320 acres of land and through industrious habits and frugal management, finally became the owner of more than 800 acres, and one of the most extensive farmers in that vicinity. He was a member of the Board of Supervisors for Frederick Township for many years. A member of the Masonic fraternity, he was a Lutheran in religious faith, his wife being a Christian. Mr. Messerer died in 1859, and his wife on November 10, 1881, having survived her husband twenty-two years.

Of five children born to Mr. and Mrs. Messerer, two died in infancy; Joseph, after spending his youth on the home farm, of which he took charge after the death of his father for three years, entered into the mining business in California, about 1880 going to Chili, South America, where he was superintendent of a mine until his death some years since; Elizabeth (now deceased) married Hudson M. Deane of Frederick, Ill., February 17, 1859, and died March 3, 1902, having borne her husband seven children, of whom four died in infancy; and Louisa, born in 1844, on February 8, 1865, married Davis H. Curry, who died May 17, 1873. On January 1, 1879, she married Benjamin F. Rebman of Frederick, and is now the only member of her father's family still living. Five children were born of the first union, of whom Amos, Bert, Beulah and David Curry (the last two twins) are still living, and three of the second union, of whom Gail and Herman Rebman are living, the former a teacher and the latter with his parents on the farm. (See sketch of Benjamin F. Rebman in another part of this volume).

MILBY, Edward T.—In the mind of Edward T. Milby the fast fading pioneer history of Schuyler County, Ill., remains a vivid and enduring memory. His life is of the home-spun kind, a record of hard work performed with cheerfulness and intelligence, of obstacles surmounted with vigor and determination, and of sacrifices made with true Christian courage and fortitude. Incidents of early times recalled by him are tree felling, stump pulling with oxen, log cabin rearing, plowing, cultivating and harvesting with the crudest of agricultural implements, spinning, weaving, tallow dip making, flint fire lighting, husking bees, barn raisings, apple parings and church "socials" and donations. In all of these Mr. Milby took an active interest, although certain of them fell to the lot of the women members of his own and his father's household. In his present leisure he delights to recall the comparative quiet of a time long since elapsed, and to contrast it with the nerve-racking, competition-torn age in which his declining years are being spent.

Mr. Milby is one of the wealthy retired farmers of Rushville, Ill., and all that he has is the result of his own untiring exertions. He was born in the State of Delaware, August 4, 1835, and is a son of Nathaniel and Eliza J. (Wilson) Milby, also natives of Delaware. The father developed the pioneering inclination and sold his Delaware property in 1839, and in the winter of 1840, with his wife and four children, undertook the journey to Illinois which consumed the greater part of the season. Edward T. Milby remembers well this arduous journey, although he was but five years old, and especially that part made on the canal, through which they were drawn on a boat by a single horse. During this portion of the trip the older members of the family walked for a considerable distance along the tow path, probably out of consideration for the poor, overworked horse, whose lot certainly was not an enviable one. The journey was continued in a covered wagon, and the arrival in Frederick, Schuyler County, was not calculated to inspire enthusiasm for the country to which the wayfarers had so laboriously and hopefully tended. The day was bitterly cold, the snow penetrated the chinks of the wagon, and the wind swirled across the prairies, striking a dreary chill to the heart of even the most courageous. Finding no desirable resting place, the little party soon after pushed on to Rushville, making the small village their home until the following spring. The father then located on a rented farm, and in the fall of 1841, bought eighty acres of land east of Rushville, in the township of that name. The timber on this land was dense and varied, and arduous tasks confronted the settlers. To the small log cabin which they found on the land, the father added, as such addition became necessary, until finally he had what was called a double log cabin. In this humble abode were born the rest of the children, in all eleven, eight of whom attained maturity. Three of these still survive, namely: Edward T.; Zadoc L.; and Dora, wife of David Wray, a farmer of Johnson County, Iowa. Zadoc now owns and occupies the old homestead.

Three years after the close of the Civil War (in 1868) the log house was torn down and a modern, six-room, two-story, frame dwelling was erected. This was made possible largely through the efforts of Edward T. and Zadoc, who so faithfully had worked at grubbing trees and hazel bushes, using oxen for the task, and hitching a chain around the stump or bush at which the strong animals tugged until accomplishing the task. The mother, in the meantime, rocked the cradle with one foot, while with the other she ran the spinning wheel; and later she made her cloth into jeans for her sons and into dresses for her daughters. Her toil seemed never ending, and her working day extended from the rising to the setting of the sun. The father lived to see eighty acres of his land cleared and under the plow, and he was in fairly prosperous circumstances at the time of his death, July 28, 1873. The wife who had shared his hard labors did not long survive him, her death occurring on October 12, next following. They had occupied the same farm continuously for thirty-two years, and were among the honored and influential people of the township.

Among the first of the children to leave the old Milby homestead was Edward T., who, with a practical education acquired under great difficulties, and an amount of farm experience which fitted him for conducting almost any agricultural enterprise, was married, in November, 1860, to Lizzie Hillis, and thereupon settled on a rented farm in Huntsville Township. In 1865 he purchased a small piece of land in Buena Vista Township, and there his wife died the following November, leaving him with the care of three children, of whom Frank is deceased; Clement is a farmer in Schuyler County; and Lizzie is the wife of Frank Haughduffer, of Los Angeles, California. In 1873 Mr. Milby was united in marriage to Lizzie J. Davidson, and from this union resulted two children; Walter, a farmer of Oakland Township; and Ida, wife of George Rogers, of Flagstaff, Arizona. Mrs. Milby died in 1878, and on January 21, 1886, Mr. Milby married Mary Bower, a native of Cincinnati, Ohio, and an early resident of Schuyler County.

Mr. Milby added frequently to his land until he owned a large tract, 308 acres of which still remains in his possession. He was industrious and progressive, lived always within his income, and was exceedingly conservative in adopting new and untried methods of farming. In 1903 he left the farm and located in Rushville, where live also many of his friends of the strenuous pioneer days. Politically, he has always been on the side of the Democratic party, but has steadfastly refused the honors of local office. The Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he has worshipped since early manhood, has profited continuously by his generosity and zeal, and in all the walks of life, its teachings have been his guide.

MILLER, Henry Franklin.—One of the best authorities upon stock raising in Schuyler County is Henry Franklin Miller, who, though young in years, is old in experience and rich in knowledge pertaining to this important branch of farming. Mr. Miller comes honestly by his liking for stock and his appreciation of a fine animal. His father, John Henry Miller, whose industrious life is sketched elsewhere in this work, instilled into him the tendencies since so strongly developed, and the successful manipulation of which have placed him among the men of wealth and influence in Rushville Township. Mr. Miller was born in this township July 3, 1872, and was educated in the district schools and the Rushville Normal, spending two terms at the latter institution. Upon the completion of his student life he entered into partnership with his father and brother, Simon, operating the paternal farm of 460 acres, and raising principally cattle, hogs, horses and sheep. Some of the best stock which reached the Chicago market matured on this farm during this partnership, and the three men worked in harmony and with due regard for the reputation and best interests of the stock company.

Upon the death of his father in 1902, Mr. Miller continued in business with his brother until the following year, when he rented his present farm in Section 27, Rushville Township, which is a part of the old homestead, and to which he permanently succeeded upon the death of his mother, and the division of the property. He has made many fine improvements on his land, always with the view of increasing his stock, and his farm is a splendid example of the best things known to country life at this stage of the world's progress. In 1907 he erected an eight-room, two-story modern dwelling, having the latest devices for comfort and convenience, and he has also built a barn 36 by 44 feet, ground dimensions, and eighteen feet to the eaves. He regards with particular favor Hereford cattle and Poland-China hogs, and has also a high grade of horses and sheep. Keeping in close touch with the markets, and supplying the best demands, he is prospering in his affairs, and financially, faces as hopeful a future as any man similarly employed in the county.

The bachelor life of Mr. Miller ended with his marriage, July 25, 1900, to Carrie Kruse, who was born in this township February 15, 1877, a daughter of Henry Franz and Harriet (Bead) Kruse, natives of Woodstock Township, Schuyler County, the former a son of Franz Henry D. Kruse, a native of Germany, and a very early settler of Schuyler County. Into the Miller home there have come two bright, happy children to add good cheer to this household. They are: Esther William, born June 21, 1905; and Harold Henry, born January 21, 1908. Mr. Miller is a staunch Republican, but not an office seeker. With his wife, he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, although the latter was reared in the Presbyterian faith. A pleasing personality and a desire to be in harmony with his fellow men have contributed much to the popularity and success of Mr. Miller. He is a master of the best ethics of business, and a promoter of the principle that people receive about what they give out in this world.

MILLER, John Henry (deceased), formerly an extensive farmer of Schuyler County, Ill., and father of Simon Burnett Miller, whose sketch appears in this connection, was born in Bippin, Hanover, Germany, November 4, 1824. He received his early education in his native country and in 1844, at the age of about twenty years, came to the United States, spending the first few months after his arrival in this country in Warren County, Mo., where one of his sisters had settled at an earlier date. During the spring of 1845 he came to Schuyler County, Ill., first locating in Frederick Township where two of his uncles, Henry and John Wilkey, had previously settled. Here he was employed in various occupations by the month, meantime attending school at intervals until 1849, for the purpose of acquiring a knowledge of the English language. In that year, the period of the gold fever, he purchased an ox-team and with Joel and Alford Holland, two brothers of his future wife, he crossed the plains to the Pacific Coast. As the wagon was loaded with luggage, provisions and implements, much of the journey was made by the adventurers on foot. On their arrival in the gold region, the Holland brothers turned their attention to keeping a hotel, while Mr. Miller engaged in digging for the precious metal. After spending nearly two years in the mining region, he returned to Schuyler County in 1851, and soon afterward bought 160 acres of timber land, of which a previous occupant had cleared about twenty acres, besides building thereon a log cabin. Taking possession of this land in 1852, by later purchases he increased this holding to 940 acres, upon which he conducted farming operations on a large scale and with profitable results.

On February 8, 1856 Mr. Miller was married to Sarah F. Holland, who was born in Nashville, Tenn., January 20, 1839, a daughter of John and Nancy (Kelly) Holland, early settlers of Schuyler County. Mr. and Mrs. Miller became the parents of two sons and six daughters as follows: Mary Louisa (Mrs. Dean); Emma Frances (Mrs. Armstrong); Nancy Isabella, Della May (Mrs. Kinsey); Dora Ann (Mrs. Drovey); Franklin H.; Anna E. (McCormick); and Simon B., who, with his sister, Isabelle, occupies the old home place of 240 acres, which they now own. John H. Miller's arduous and successful life came to an end February 13, 1902, the long-time companion of his toils, privations and successes passing away on February 28, 1905. They left a reputation for integrity and devotion to the interests of their family, and of the community, in which their children, while inheriting the results of their faithful labors, take a just pride.

MILLER, Simon Burnett, a well known and respected farmer of Schuyler County, Ill., residing on Section 34, Rushville Township, was born on the place on which he now lives, July 22, 1865, the son of John Henry and Sarah Frances (Holland) Miller, the former born in Bippin, Hanover, Germany, November 4, 1824, and the latter in Nashville, Tenn., January 20, 1839. (For additional details of the Miller family history, see sketch of John H. Miller in this connection). Simon Burnett Miller grew up on the home farm in Rushville Township, in the meantime receiving his educational training in the local district schools, and thus by inheritance and association acquiring those traits of character which have led him to devote his energies to agricultural pursuits, and have contributed to the success which he has attained in that line.

Mr. Miller has never been married, but has always remained under the parental roof, with his sister, Isabelle, and his brother, Franklin H., giving attention to the welfare of their parents and looking after the large property of the family. They occupy the home farm of 240 acres, of which they are now the owners, besides having an interest in other portions of the estate.

Inheriting the political faith of his father, Mr. Miller is a supporter of the principles of the Republican party, but takes no active part in political contests. In religious belief he is a Methodist, and enjoys the respect and confidence of a large circle of friends.

MILLS, William Henry Harrison, was born in Moorefield, Harrison County, O., March 19, 1840. He is a son of Elias and Isabel Jane (Glandon) Mills, natives of that State. Elias Mills devoted many years to farming, but conducted a hotel at Moorefield, Ohio, for a considerable period. Towards the end of his life he moved from Moorefield to Millersburg, O., where he died in 1893 at the age of eighty-two years. His wife died when her son, William, was quite young. They were the parents of six children, four of whom are living, namely: William H. H.; Theodore C.; Lavina, widow of David Davis; and Mary E., wife of Stephen Lewis.

In early youth Mr. Mills attended the common schools of his native place, completing his education at Franklin College, New Athens, Ohio. After leaving college, he taught school until the Civil War broke out, when he enlisted under the first call of the President for three months' troops, joining the Thirteenth Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He served in West Virginia, being detailed from the ranks as quartermaster sergeant, and was honorably discharged December 31, 1861. Subsequently, he taught school several years in Ohio, Illinois and Nebraska. In the last named State he was for some time connected with the Press, acting in the capacity of editor of the "Political Forum." He also studied law in that State and was admitted to the bar, but never engaged in practice. The farming experience of Mr. Mills in Rushville Township, Schuyler County, commenced in 1903, but in the following year the farm dwelling was destroyed by fire, and he then established his home in Rushville, Ill.

Mr. Mills was married at Macomb, McDonough County, Ill., October 2, 1895. On that date Neosha M. Teel became his wife, Rev. J. H. Brattan, of the Presbyterian Church, performing the ceremony at his residence. Mrs. Mills was born in Rushville Township, on November 28, 1869, and is a daughter of James and Elizabeth (Smith) Teel. A sketch of her father's life may be found elsewhere in this volume. Mr. and Mrs. Mills are the parents of three children, namely: Ruth Elizabeth Teel, born June 22, 1897; James Teel, born April 28, 1899; and Theodore Roosevelt Teel, born March 25, 1901.

In politics, Mr. Mills is an earnest and steadfast Republican. He is a man of superior intelligence and sound information, and takes a good citizen's interest in public affairs.

MOORE, James.—The extremes of poverty and affluence have met in the career of James Moore, the pendulum of whose life has swung between a rude log cabin, sixteen feet square, sheltering resolute pioneer parents and their twelve children, and a beautiful home in Rushville, including 450 acres of as fine land as is to be found in Schuyler County. Many useful lessons fall from the life of this earnest, high-minded retired farmer, and among these the value of industry, definite purpose and belief in one's own good destiny are by no means the least important.

Mr. Moore has far exceeded the biblical allotment of life, being more than four-score years old. He was born in Lincoln County, Ky., August 30, 1828, his parents, Thomas and Mary (Elmore) Moore, being natives of the same State, in which one of his ancestors, from North Carolina, settled previous to the Revolutionary War. At the age of thirty-five, the elder Moore was appointed a drillmaster of militia for the region of Kentucky in which he lived, and served in that capacity for eight years. The family removed from Kentucky to Schuyler County during the fall of 1836, and located in what now is Buena Vista Township, but which at that time had not been visited by a surveyor, or platted in even irregular fashion. The first surveyor was a Mr. Edmonston, who also did the assessing for the whole county. Mr. Moore was about eight years of age when brought to Schuyler County, and his early experiences were along hard and self-sacrificing lines. The constantly increasing number of children in the Moore household proved a drain upon the comparatively meager resources of the crude farm, with its cruder implements, but in spite of never ceasing tasks during the summer, and but little leisure in the winter, he gained a fair common school education, and developed great self-reliance and determination.

The monotonous round of farm life remained unabated for Mr. Moore until the neighborhood in which he lived became infected with the gold fever in the early 'fifties. With characteristic readiness to recognize and utilize the opportunities of life, he set to work to make his dream of wealth come true, seeking for some way to reach the opulent land, basking under the perpetual California sun. The winter of 1852-53 found him busy with consultations and preparations for the long jaunt across the plains, and in March he started out with his cousin and a friend, their equipment consisting of two yoke of sturdy oxen, a yoke of cows, a wagon with a cover, and the necessary provisions for six months on the road. The long train left the Missouri River to encounter a thinly settled region, and upon the present site of Omaha was an Indian trading post, surrounded by the huts of a few courageous settlers. The travelers made settlement in the northern part of California, camping beside Snake Lake, which Mr. Moore thought appropriately named, as thousands of reptiles infested both lake and the immediate country. Mr. Moore found work at Bidwell's Bar for a time, whence he went to Hangtown, and later to Placerville, where he remained until 1855. He then returned home by way of Panama and New York, reaching the latter place February 1, 1855. His luck had been only that of the average miner, but he had stored his memory with a wealth of varied experience, and had gained much of self-assurance and independence from contact with the rough elements of the mining camps.

Again in Schuyler County, Mr. Moore invested his earnings in a farm of 140 acres in Oakland Township, paying $800 down and going in debt for a similar amount. Much timber and undergrowth abounded on the place, but when it was cleared and the land tilled, he sold it at great advance over the purchase price. He then purchased 150 acres in Buena Vista Township, built on it a fine residence, barns and outbuildings, and in time added to it until he was the owner of his present farm of 450 acres. His land is fertile and splendidly improved, and has been the scene of important scientific operations in accordance with the best known methods. Mr. Moore has also possessed keen business sagacity, a trait which has belonged to many members of his family, and upon which all have prided themselves. He is broad-minded and generous enough to attribute much of his success to the help and sympathy of a capable wife, whom he married October 5, 1859, and who was formerly Margaret I. Ellis, daughter of James Ellis, one of the honored pioneer farmers of Schuyler County. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Moore, the first of whom died at the age of seventeen months, and the second at the age of five months. Lois, next in order of birth, is living with her parents; Bertha is the deceased wife of Joseph Clow, an attorney of Chicago; and her only child, Margaret, is making her home with her Grandfather Moore; Mary is the wife of Robert R. Jones, for some years Washington correspondent of the Chicago Inter-Ocean, and later managing editor of that paper, and is the mother of three children, Robert M., James M. and Ellis R.; and Harriet M. is the wife of George Thomas, a belt manufacturer of Evans-ton.

In 1876 Mr. Moore left his farm and located in Rushville in order to educate his children, and in 1893 he went to Evanston in order that his daughters might attend the Northwestern University. In the education and training of his children he has maintained the same high standards and ideals which made his work as a farmer worthy and successful, and, in their moral and religious development, he has shown great consideration and forethought. All of the family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Of the twelve children born to Thomas and Mary (Elmore) Moore, seven are now living, and all are prosperous and honored members of the communities in which they live. No greater contrasts could picture human memory than those cherished by Mr. Moore and his brothers and sisters. The small farm of the establisher of the name in this part of the State has been lost in the properties of the Moore Brothers, which, in the aggregate, would cover more than two square miles. Gas and electricity are at the disposal of these people who clasp hands with the crude pioneer days, but all can recall how the cabin was lighted by a tallow dip, and how the mother often would be driven to the expediency of putting her little brood to bed by the light of a burning rag in an iron spoon filled with lard. Throughout all of these changes Mr. Moore has kept his nature serene and his heart young, and today he is conscious of few of the infirmities usually associated with men of his years.

MOORE, John D.—Upon no couple identified with the retired farming population of Rushville does the spirit of other days rest more tenderly and impressively than upon John A. and Mary A. (Turner) Moore. The lives of this devoted and intelligent man and woman—the former of whom is eighty-two and the latter seventy-seven years of age—express a degree of constancy and philosophy rarely achieved by mortals who have shared in a common struggle for so many years, and this fact, as much as the one of financial and general prosperity, entitles them to a warm place in the hearts of the people, as it does in the annals of Schuyler County.

Born on a farm in Kentucky, December 7, 1825, Mr. Moore is a son of Thomas and Mary (Elmore) Moore, also natives of the Bourbon State, who came overland with a covered wagon and horses to Schuyler County at a very early period in its history, locating on land which thus far was a stranger to the ways of the white brethren of the plains. The father erected a cabin near a stream, cleared a space for his first crop, and eventually gained a modest fortune for those dependent upon his care. The son, John D., had few early advantages, and his youth slipped by in the dull routine of farming, his education being acquired in the subscription school in the neighborhood of his home. He was studious and ambitious, however, and saw beyond the rim of the paternal acres. Especially was he open to the chances around him, and when glad tales of untold wealth discovered on the Pacific coast reached his quiet home, his alert spirit responded with more than average fervor. The winter of 1848-49 passed all too slowly for the youth with golden dreams, and in bleak March he joined an ox-train bound for California, starting from Brooklyn, Schuyler County, and arriving at the south fork of the American River, August 12 following. Good fortune attended him almost from the first, and in one day he took out three hundred dollars worth of gold. On the south and middle forks of the same river, he was equally fortunate, and in his two years' absence from his home he cleared up about $2,500. In the fall of 1851 he returned to Schuyler County, fully satisfied with his sojourn in the West, and on February 29, 1852, was united in marriage to Mary A. Turner, who was born in Rushville, March 8, 1831, a daughter of Samuel and Rachel (Robertson) Turner, natives of Virginia and North Carolina, respectively. Mr. and Mrs. Turner were among the very early pioneers of Schuyler County, coming here from the South during 1829. They had three children, the survivors of whom are Mrs. Moore and Allen Turner, the latter a farmer of Buena Vista Township.

While in California Mr. Moore sent home $400 to be invested in land in Buena Vista Township, as his marriage was already a settled plan, and upon it was based his fortune-getting aspirations. The young people settled upon this land directly after their marriage, beginning housekeeping in a rude log cabin with clapboards for shingles, and the most primitive and incomplete furnishings. To his first purchase he added ninety acres after a few years, and thus had a farm of 150 acres, upon which he followed general farming and stock raising for the rest of his active life. More land was added as success in greater degree came his way, and at the present time he is the owner of 700 acres of fine land, practically all under cultivation, and located in Littleton and Buena Vista townships. In 1895 Mr. and Mrs. Moore moved to the city of Rushville, where they own and occupy a pleasant home, which is the delight of their many friends, and the center of never failing hospitality. Mr. Moore has declared many times and oft that the most fortunate event in his life was his marriage in 1852, for his wife has made his home a constant joy, and his life a continuous inspiration to well doing. Many have been the wedding anniversary celebrations of this couple, but the best attended and most important of all was the golden wedding, March 1, 1892, when friends came to greet and congratulate them from near and far, among other tokens of their regard presenting the husband with a gold-headed cane, and the wife with a gold thimble. Both are justly proud of these tokens of esteem, and are also proud of the fact that their health is excellent, their spirits undiminished, and their interest in life as keen as when they swelled the list of cabin builders in the dawn of the county's history. Cheerfulness, kindness and goodness abound in this comfortable home, and from the lives of its occupants he who would may read the value of these inestimable qualities.

On the farm in Buena Vista Township were born the eleven children of Mr. and Mrs. Moore. George T., the oldest son, is deserving of special mention as a clergyman of unusual zeal and high character. This minister was one of the early settlers of Des Moines, Ia., and in youth learned the blacksmith trade. Having no one to build his church in Des Moines, and no money to hire it built, he put on his blue jeans, went to the concrete factory and made the fifteen hundred blocks of concrete necessary for its construction. He then, with his own hands, put the blocks together, finished the church in its every detail, and started upon a ministry which bore wonderful fruit as the years passed, and kindlier opportunities came the way of the zealous church man. Of the other children, Andy died at the age of nineteen years; Christopher died in infancy; James B. married Minnie Scott, and lives in Sherman County, Kans.; Geneva, a resident of Macomb, Ill., is the widow of Hardin L. Richey; Mary A. is the wife of Sevalis Ross, of Buena Vista Township; Miner A. lives in Canada; Wheeler A. lives on the old farm and married Carrie Boyd; Anna B. is the wife of George Demaree, a railroad man living in Danville, Ill., and Peter lives with his parents.

MOORE, Lewis Ross, Sheriff of Schuyler County, Ill., was born in Oakland Township, Schuyler County, September 16, 1864, and is a son of Solomon and Sarah Jane (Logan) Moore. The father, a native of Kentucky, became a resident of Schuyler County in 1854, buying a farm on Section 27, Oakland Township, where he died July 18, 1877, aged sixty-two years. His wife was a daughter of Joseph Logan, who came to Littleton Township when wolves were plentiful and wild game abundant. After the death of Solomon Moore, his widow made her home with her children and died March 6, 1901, at the age of seventy-five years. In religion she adhered to the faith of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which was also the religious belief of her husband. Politically, Solomon Moore voted with the Democratic party.

During boyhood Lewis R. Moore attended the district schools until he was fifteen years of age, when he started out to shape his own career, and for many years was employed on farms in the neighborhood. Later he turned his attention to carpentering, and was employed at this trade during the summer months for several years. In 1893 he became clerk in a general store in Ray, Ill., where he was employed for three years, and here his circle of acquaintances was widened to include practically every one in the township, and it was most natural that he drifted into local politics, as he had a natural aptitude for making friends. He was first elected Collector of Oakland Township in 1898 and served two terms, and in 1900 was elected Assessor, after which, in 1902, he was chosen to fill the position of Township Clerk. During these later years in which he was taking an interest in local politics, Mr. Moore represented his township for several terms on the Democratic County Central Committee, and was also the Ray correspondent of the Rushville Times, and soon became well known through the county as one of the workers in the Democratic party.

In 1902 Mr. Moore was appointed Deputy Sheriff under Felix Jackson, and so well did he acquit himself in this office that in the following campaign he was chosen as the party candidate for Sheriff by a large majority, and at the election on November 6, 1906, he received a majority of 567 votes. In the administration of his office Mr. Moore has proven himself to be efficient, capable, honorable and thoroughly fearless, a champion of justice and a firm upholder of the law.

On May 16, 1906, Mr. Moore was united in marriage with Mrs. Anna Neeley, daughter of John Greer, one of the pioneers of Littleton Township, and upon his election as Sheriff he and his wife took up their residence in Schuyler County's handsome new jail. In his fraternal relations Mr. Moore is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, Modern Woodmen of America and Mystic Workers. Mr. and Mrs. Moore are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

MOORE, Reuben Menephe.—The magic word, success, has hovered over the Moore family ever since its establishment in Schuyler County, Ill., more than seventy years ago. Its influence was founded in the small beginnings and uncertain outlook of the log-cabin era, and the broader opportunities which have been unfolded with the passing years have found those bearing the name resourceful, competent and remarkably ambitious. Thomas Moore, a Kentuckian, who heard the far off call of the frontier, set up standards of life and work which have never since fallen into disuse by his successors. He owned a comparatively small farm, and his sons now pay taxes on more than two square miles of farm land. Thomas Moore had eight children when he decided to share the fortunes of the Central West, and with him on that long overland journey came another family, that of Washington Irvin. In the latter family were six children, and the fourteen children and their parents came in a prairie schooner drawn by four horses, taking one month to span the distance between Kentucky and Illinois. The brave wayfarers met with many obstacles on the way, and were retarded by muddy roads, storms and swollen streams, and upon arriving at Springfield, which then was a small aggregation of interests, the horses were hitched at a post near the present State capitol building. The old prairie schooner, travel stained and creaking, presented a sorry spectacle, yet it brought this way men who read the horoscope of Schuyler County, and who worked from morn until night for many years, to make their dream of success come true. Thomas Moore took up land in Buena Vista Township, and there remained until his death, one of its most able and highly honorable men. Not only did he develop his farm to its fullest capacity, surrounding himself and family with the refinements and comforts known to his time and place, but he took an active interest in education, religion and politics, and represented in the general tenor of his life the vigorous, honest and indefatigable element which developed the primeval fertility of the Illinois plains, and moved the frontier a little farther towards the Pacific. He was a man of profound religious convictions, and organized the first Methodist Episcopal Church to Buena Vista Township. He also provided the money for the first church and school building, and had both erected on his land. At all times strictly temperate in both eating and drinking, he worked hard to make the community a Prohibition one, and it was largely through his zeal that the two distilleries operating in the township were driven out of business.

Of the eight children who came with Thomas Moore from Kentucky to Illinois, Reuben Menephe Moore was born near Crab Orchard, Lincoln County, in the former State, October 15, 1835, and was therefore about a year old when brought to Buena Vista Township. He attended the old cross-roads school house in the winter time, and in summer worked in the harvest fields, or helped to clear the timber and underbrush. His duties comprised the hard ones that tested the fiber of the youth of his time, but they failed to break his spirit or discourage him for the severe struggle of his later years. In 1847 his father sold the original farm and moved to the one now occupied by Reuben, and here he has lived continuously for sixty years. At the time of purchase there was an old frame building on the place 16 by 32 feet in dimensions, but the place had been vastly improved when Thomas Moore died there January 22, 1867.

In company with others, Mr. Moore started out with ox teams for the Idaho gold mines, and on arriving at Salt Lake City, he found work.

According to the custom in all new localities in the far West, he was soon christened anew, thereafter being known as Gentle Rube. He remained in the city about four months, and then took the southern route for Los Angeles with a freighting outfit, arriving at his destination December 24. Behind him in Illinois the land was locked in ice and farmers were driving over the fences, but near the Pacific the flowers were in bloom, and all nature wore an enchanting smile. While in California he followed general farming and stock raising, and also operated a threshing machine. Pasadena at that time was a sheep ranch, as were also the sites of many other villages and towns which now add to the splendor of the great Pacific State.

After his return from the West, Mr. Moore took charge of the old place in Buena Vista Township, and on July 27, 1867, was united in marriage to Eliza A. Ellis, a native of Kentucky, born September 1, 1841. Mrs. Moore is a daughter of James Ellis, who came to Schuyler County in 1844, and who, with his wife, is now deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. Moore have been born four sons and four daughters: Effie D., born June 28, 1868, died October 16, 1871; Uriah G., born January 20, 1870, married Ella Strausbaugh, and has nine children—Ruth, Ruby, Lea (deceased), Glenn, Floyd, Harriet, Nina, Mary, and Robert; Margaret Eve, born January 10, 1872, wife of Joseph McFeeters, a farmer of Buena Vista Township, and mother of Hildreth and Ray McFeeters; Mary J., born February 19, 1874, wife of Luther Greer, and mother of Gladys, Helen and Susan Greer; James Ray, born December 29, 1877, died November 22, 1878; Noah R., born May 16, 1879; Thomas E., born December 16, 1884, died April 15, 1886; and Lela, born March 15, 1886, died June 1, 1898, at the age of twelve years. Mr. and Mrs. Moore have thirteen grandchildren, all of whom are devoted to their kind and indulgent grandparents. All of the children have been born in the old home upon which their father settled at the age of thirteen with his parents, and here all have received the best advantages permitted by the prosperity of the family. Mr. Moore purchased his brother Sam's interest in the 240 acres, and to his first 120 acres has added until he now owns 440. No more productive property is to be found in this part of the State, and no better farmer has followed the light shed upon agriculture by science than this honored, old time settler.

Except as a School Director and Road Commissioner, Mr. Moore has steadfastly refused to accept official recognition, although he has been a staunch supporter of the Republican party. As was that of his father before him, his name stands for all that is honorable and worth while in country life and work, and he is one of the few left of the pathfinders whose story constitutes one of the most interesting chapters in American history.

ally their fortunes with the thinly settled and not altogether promising region in Illinois, since named Schnyler County, possessed an intensity of purpose and determination but partially comprehended by the wage earners of today. The deprivation and isolation they endured, nevertheless, were factors in molding character and stimulating industry and largeness of sympathy, and these traits have been handed down to the succeeding generation, among whom is Samuel T. Moore, a prominent farmer of Buena Vista Township, where he was born August 22, 1841.

Thomas Moore, father of Samuel, was born in Kentucky, and was reared to farming as followed in the Southern States. In 1836, ambitious of growing up with a more progressive community, he moved to Illinois with his wife, formerly Mary Elmore, also a native of the Blue Grass State. Taking up Government land in Buena Vista Township, Schuyler County, he was engaged in general farming and stock-raising until his death in 1867. Thirty-seven years of this experience enabled him to lay by a competence, and the faithful companion of his toils, who survived him until 1881, and to whom his success was largely due, spent her last days in the most comfortable of surroundings. She was a daughter of John Elmore, also of Kentucky. Mr. Moore himself was a son of David Moore, who moved from his native state of North Carolina to Kentucky while still a young and unmarried man.

Samuel Moore has known no other occupation than that afforded on his own and his father's farm. He has 485 acres of land under a high state of cultivation, and raises general crops and high grade stocks. In 1873, in the township of Rushville, he was united in marriage to Mary Barkman, who was born in Ohio, and whose parents, natives of Maryland and Ohio, respectively, came to Oakland Township, Schuyler County, in 1865, locating some years later in Littleton Township. To Mr. and Mrs. Moore have been born five children, namely: Mary Olive, Fannie Florence, Luther, Jesse and Kenneth. Mary Olive is the wife of William Kordsimon, a resident of Berwyn, a suburb of Chicago; Fannie F. is the wife of George Sloan, of Belle Plain, Kan.; and Luther, a farmer in Buena Vista Township, married Stella Sherman. Mr. Moore has thoroughly educated his children, and provided liberally for those who have left the old home. No family has done more for the agricultural advancement of Schuyler County, and the promotion of its various public enterprises than have the descendants of Thomas Moore, the sturdy pioneer of 1836.

In politics, Mr. Moore is a Republican. He and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

MOORE, Wheeler W.—Fortunate, indeed, is the man who is sustained by an inspiring consciousness that he has made the best use of whatever talents and abilities have been vouchsafed to him; that he has ignored no call of duty; that he has wasted no precious opportunities; that he has faithfully discharged his obligations to the public, and that he has established an unblemished reputation among those whose good opinion and good wishes are of inestimable value, and constitute a source of perpetual encouragement. Such is the life record made by Wheeler W. Moore, an enterprising and progressive farmer of Buena Vista Township, Schuyler County, Ill., and a leading citizen of that locality.

Mr. Moore was born in Buena Vista Township, August 26, 1866. His father, John D. Moore, also a farmer by occupation, was a Kentuckian by birth, while his mother, Mary A. (Turner) Moore, was born in Buena Vista Township. Further details of the family history are contained in a biographical record of John D. Moore, appearing elsewhere in this connection.

In boyhood Mr. Moore attended the public schools in his vicinity, completing his literary education in the Rushville Normal School and the Chaddock College at Quincy, Ill., and subsequently pursuing a commercial course in the Metropolitan Business College, in Chicago. He passed his early youth on the parental farm, and after finishing his studies, was employed for 14 months as mailing clerk for the Troy Laundry Machinery Co., of Chicago. He next spent 15 months with the Metropolitan Insurance Co., at Peoria, Ill., after which he applied himself to farming, in which pursuit he has had his full share of success. His farming operations cover 500 acres of land, situated in Section 14, Buena Vista Township. Besides general farming, he is an extensive feeder, shipping about ten carloads of cattle and hogs per year. He holds the office of Grand Master of Buena Vista Grange.

On March 23, 1904, in Rushville Township, Schuyler County, Mr. Moore was united in marriage with Carrie Boyd, a daughter of James and Eliza (Ritchey) Boyd, who was born in Oakland Township, Schuyler County, Ill., in 1877. Her parents are natives of Ireland, and on coming to the United States, first located in Pittsburgh, Pa., whence they moved to Schuyler County, Ill., at the outset making their home in Oakland Township. They now live in Rushville Township, where Mr. Boyd is successfully engaged in farming. Mrs. Moore received her education in Oakland and Rushville townships. She and her husband are the parents of one child, James Francis.

Mr. Moore is active in political affairs, and renders an earnest and steadfast support to the Republican party. For two terms he has served in the capacity of Township Central Committeeman, and in April, 1907, was elected Supervisor from Buena Vista Township, which is normally Democratic, receiving 49 majority, and overcoming a contrary majority of 30. In fraternal circles, he is affiliated with the I. O. O. F., having been for 18 years a member of Friendship Lodge, No. 24, of Rushville. He is also a member of Rushville Lodge, No. 9, A. F.

& A. M.; of Rushville Chapter No. 184, R. A. Masons; and of Rushville Commandery No. 56, Knights Templar. Religiously, Mr. Moore is a consistent member of the Methodist Church. He is a man of sterling characteristics, and one of the most favorably known residents of his township.

MORGAN, Edward T.—One of the most productive and up-to-date farms in Schuyler County is that owned and occupied by Mr. Morgan, on Section 1, Camden Township, where he has 225 acres, and in Brooklyn Township he also owns eighty acres, making in all 305 acres under his care and management. The records show that the Morgan family is of eastern origin. The grandfather, David Morgan, was born on May 25, 1775. When the now flourishing city of Cincinnati was a mere trading post and boasted only thirty houses. David Morgan cast in his lot with the early settlers, purchasing considerable property there, and it is believed that his death occurred there. Among his seven children was Roswell Morgan, born in Vermont. Upon reaching years of maturity he married Calista C. Davis, a native of New York State. Some time after his marriage and the birth of a number of his children, Roswell Morgan, in company with Ward Davis and his family of eleven children, came to Schuyler County and settled in Camden Township. All but three of the Davis children were married when they came to Schuyler County, and their descendants have become very numerous in Buena Vista and Brooklyn townships, the records showing ninety-three grandchildren of Ward Davis in Schuyler County at one time. During the War of 1812 Ward Davis was drafted into the army, but was not called upon to serve. Isaac Davis, his youngest son, who served as a Lieutenant in one of the Illinois regiments, left Schuyler County about 1870, locating in Cloud County, Kans., where the name became almost if not quite as well known as it was in Schuyler County. A number of his kinsmen also located there, and at one time it was estimated that there were 117 descendants of Ward Davis in Cloud County alone. Of the large family of children born to Ward Davis and his wife, only three are now living. Isaac, the youngest, being eighty years of age.

Eight children were born of the marriage of Roswell and Calista C. (Davis) Morgan, named in order of birth as follows: George W., deceased, who during the war served in an Illinois regiment, and is buried in Prairie City, McDonough County; Eliza A., the wife of Lewis Craycroft, living near Wichita, Kans.; Francis R. and Charles V., both deceased; Edward T.; Thomas Jefferson, who died in infancy; Martha J., widow of W. C. Avery, who is now making her home with her brother Edward T.; and Helen M., wife of William Park, an extensive farmer near Flagler, Colorado. The father of these children died October 3, 1863, and the wife and mother followed him twenty years later, dying in 1883.

The fifth child in the parental family, Edward T. Morgan, was born in Franklin County, Ind., September 30, 1841, and was a child of about eight years when the family located in Illinois. He distinctly recalls the long, lonesome walks to and from the district school, which was three miles from his home, through the dense timber. He has lived to see this supplanted by waving fields of grain, and he himself has been no small factor in bringing about this transformation. In this wilderness his father entered 160 acres of land from the Government in 1851, and the original deed to it, signed by Franklin Pierce, is now in the possession of Edward Morgan. To his original tract of 160 acres Roswell Morgan added by purchase forty acres of adjoining land, owing in all 200 acres, upon which he built a log cabin. This in time gave place to a more modern house, in which the doors and window sash were made by hand, and the front part of this same structure, which has stood the elements for fifty years, is now occupied by his son Edward T.

When about twenty-one years of age Edward T. Morgan responded to his country's call for volunteers, enlisting in Company A, Seventy-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for three years. With his regiment he saw service in many of the hard-fought battles of the war, among them the battles of Chickamauga and Kenesaw Mountain, and was with Sherman in his March to the Sea. After the surrender of General Lee he took part in the Grand Review at Washington, in which city he was mustered out, and after receiving pay for his services at Chicago, returned to the old home farm in Camden Township. Soon afterward, July 22, 1866, he was united in marriage with Adelaide E. Bennett, a native of Schuyler County, born April 3, 1850, the daughter of John K. and Eliza A. (Madison) Bennett, a niece of President Madison. After their marriage the young people settled on Mr. Bennett's farm, later purchasing it, but in 1877 they sold it and moved onto the old home farm of his father, having purchased the interests of the others in the property.

Eight children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Morgan, as follows: Frederick L., born in Schuyler County, April 23, 1867, married Monetta Busby, and they make their home on a farm in Camden Township; Bertha G., was born August 13, 1869, and became the wife of Charles Applegate, a farmer in Littleton Township, by whom she has become the mother of two children, Gny and Ruth; Luther T. was born March 11, 1872; Gilbert, February 10, 1874; Myrtle, August 10, 1876; Cora E., was born April 3, 1879; and died June 17, 1903; Winnie G. was born August 4, 1881, and became the wife of John Crane; the youngest child, Rudolph B., was born February 20, 1884, and is now a teacher in the district school at Bushnell, Ill.; by his marriage with Inez McFall he has one child, Winona L. Mrs. Eliza A. Morgan passed to her reward August 31, 1885, mourned by her husband and children as a Christian wife and mother. Not only her family miss her kind ministrations, but many friends and acquaintances who had been drawn to her by her sweet personality and by the many kindnesses shown them in time of need. Being deprived of a good education in his own boyhood, Mr. Morgan made every effort to give his children good educational facilities and fit them for the responsibilities of life. In turn they have appreciated the efforts made in their behalf, and in growing to manhood and womanhood have been a credit and a comfort to their parents. At one time Mr. Morgan was enumerator of Camden Township and School Treasurer of Bainbridge Township, where he made his home for a number of years. Politically, he is a Republican.

MORRIS, John W.—Since his arrival in Rushville in 1866, John W. Morris has filled a large need as an expert carpenter and has accumulated a comfortable competence through the unfailing medium of thrift and economy. His quiet and uneventful, yet useful life began April 8, 1832, on a farm in Virginia, in which State were born both his parents, William and Eliza (Palmer) Morris, and his grandfathers, Thomas Morris and Robert Palmer. William Morris established the family in Ohio upon leaving Virginia, afterward settling in Edgar County, Ill., where terminated his industrious and moderately successful career.

With the basis of a common school education and careful home training, John W. Morris has followed carpentering all his active life with the exception of traveling for two and a half years for a commercial house, and being employed in a general dry-goods business for the same length of time. Many of the oldest and foremost families of Rushville have been his patrons for many years, and his careful, skillful and always reliable work has secured him continuous employment from one end of the year to the other. The passing of many years has not robbed him of his interest in his labor, or of his skill in the manipulation of tools.

In politics Mr. Morris is a staunch Republican, and in religion he is a Methodist. For many years he has been associated with the Masons. His marriage to Elizabeth Cary, of Edgar County, Ill., occurred in 1860, and of this union there are three daughters, of whom Mary C. is the wife of Oliver T. Lawler, a farmer of Schuyler County; Annie E. is the wife of Edward C. Hammon, of Scott County, Ill., and Alice G. is the wife of C. H. Hackett, of Jacksonville, Ill.

MOURNING, David Lyon.—To David Lyon Mourning is due the distinction of being the only Republican ever elected to the office of County Judge of Schuyler County, Ill. Mr. Mourning has been a resident of Rushville since 1890, coming here from Hancock County, in that year. He read law in the office of D. F. Miller & Son, of Keokuk, Ia., where he was admitted to the Bar in 1881. In Rushville he has combined a general practice of law with enthusiastic political activity, and besides being a candidate for County Judge on two occasions, was the defeated candidate for State's Attorney in 1892, and the successful candidate for City Attorney of Rushville, for three terms.

Luck or chance has had no part in fashioning the success of Mr. Mourning, and from him the young man who aspires to legal honors may learn many useful lessons. He was born on a farm in Hancock County, Ill., March 14, 1857, and the labors of his early years left little opportunity for idle dreams or ambitions. Work, ceaseless work, was the only thing to lift him from his limitations, and place him in the line of more congenial effort. On the paternal side he inherits the resourcefulness of the Irish race, and especially of his great-grandfather, Rodger Mourning, who crossed the seas from Ireland, and carved his career in a land of strange people and stranger opportunities. John Mourning, the paternal grandfather, was born in Ireland. He married Hannah Ball, and settled on the farm in Kentucky, where Samuel Mourning, father of the subject of this sketch, was born, and where was also born David's mother, Nancy A. (Lyon) Mourning. Nancy A. was a daughter of John and Martha (Martin) Lyon.

David Lyon Mourning received his preliminary education in Hancock County, Ill., and by studying overtime, and improving every moment of leisure, qualified at an early age as a teacher. It was his savings in this occupation that enabled him to begin the study of law at Keokuk, and to live in comparative comfort while becoming established as a practitioner. On June 30, 1887, he was united in marriage to Olive Wetzel, a native of Hancock County, Ill., and their union resulted in three children: Mabel, Paul W. and Esther. Mr. Mourning adds to his legal and political qualifications a predilection for the social side of life, and he is prominent in the Modern Woodmen of America and the Mystic Workers. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He represents the highest ideals of his profession, and has a growing and lucrative practice.

MUNROE, Thomas Irvin, a very promising young lawyer of Rushville Ill., where he was born January 15, 1881, is a son of Hinman and Anna E. (Irvin) Munroe, of whom the father was born in Rushville, July 21, 1852. Thomas and Annis (Hinman) Munroe, the paternal grandparents, were natives of Maryland and New York, respectively, the former born in Annapolis, January 4, 1807, and the latter in Utica, December 10, 1815. The great-grandparents on the paternal side were John and Anne (Wells) Munroe. Both were born in Annapolis, John Munroe on August 6, 1763, and his wife January 23, 1771. The maternal grandparents, William S. and Mary C. (Wells) Irvin, were natives of Harrodsburg, Ky., and Littleton, Ill., respectively. The great-grandparents on the maternal side were William and Anna (Clark) Irvin.

Grandfather Thomas Munroe, who was a physician of note, was related to Nathan Hammond and Jonathan Pinekney, both of whom were conspicuous figures in the Colonial days of the country. Dr. Munroe left Annapolis, Md., in 1834, and settled in Jacksonville, Ill., whence, in 1842, he removed to Rushville, in the future affairs of which he was destined to take a prominent part. From the first he made his influence felt, not only in the sphere of medicine, in which he was an admitted expert, but in politics and society. He was a graduate of St. John's College and the Baltimore University, and had practiced medicine and surgery for a year in Annapolis, and during his residence in Jacksonville. He continued in active practice until 1885. Dr. Munroe served in the Civil War as "chief" surgeon in the One Hundred and Nineteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, with the rank of Major. He was the intimate friend of War Governor Richard Yates, served as best man at Mr. Yates' wedding, and entertained the chief executive of the State at his home in Rushville in 1861. He held Richard Yates, Jr., in his arms when the War Governor was inaugurated. Dr. Munroe's forceful and interesting personality won him the confidence and friendship of many of the foremost men in the State, and his practical and sagacious advice was frequently sought upon matters of vital importance.

A world of interesting reminiscence centers around Annis (Hinman) Munroe, grandmother of Thomas Irvin Munroe and wife of Thomas Munroe. This woman of many years and noble life was presented with a solid gold spoon by the Daughters of the American Revolution in 1898, and no honor was ever more worthily conferred. The ranks of the daughters of Revolutionary heroes have been sadly thinned, and few indeed are the living children of men who followed Washington and his Generals in the great struggle for freedom from English rule. Not many families were more represented in this war than that to which Mrs. Munroe belonged. Her father, Major Benjamin Hinman, was one of thirteen of this name to become commissioned officers from the town of Woodbury, Conn. Asa and Ephraim Hinman, brothers of Benjamin, attained the rank of colonel, and a cousin, Captain Elisha Hinman, had command of a ship of war fitted out by the Colonists. Major Benjamin Hinman was aid to General Greene, of Revolutionary fame. John E. Hinman, a son of Major Benjamin, was mayor of Utica, New York, in 1824, and entertained the Marquis de Lafayette on the occasion of his visit to America during 1824-5. At this memorable reception, Annis, sister of the mayor, and then nine years old, was present, and one of the pleasantest recollections of her later life was that of sitting on the knee of the distinguished and patriotic Frenchman, and conversing with him in his native tongue. Annis' only daughter, Mary E.

Munroe, still occupies the old homestead in Rushville, bluilt by the Hinmans seventy-nine years ago.

Thomas Irvin Munroe attended the public schools of Rushville, and the University of Michigan, graduating from Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn. Since his admission to the bar in 1904, he has been engaged in the general practice of law in his native town. On June 28, 1905, he was united in marriage to Mary Barclay Crawford, who was born in Bradford, Ill., and educated at Knox College, Galesburg. Mr. Munroe is a Democrat, in politics, and in religion, a Presbyterian. He is a young man of energy and resourcefulness and a careful student of men and events, and those who know him best predict for him the highest honors of his profession.

MUNSON, Henry O., M. D.—Of the leading practitioners who lend character to and inspire confidence in the profession of medicine and surgery in Rushville, none have a more enviable reputation than Dr. Henry A. Munson. A genuine and deep-seated liking for his calling, the best training possible in this country and in Europe, a most progressive spirit and a keen appreciation of exhaustless possibilities for useful discovery, are the chief contributory causes of the success which this skillful disciple of Hahnemann has achieved.

Dr. Munson is a native of Potsdam, St. Lawrence County, N. Y., where he was born August 14, 1867. When quite young he moved with his parents, George A. and Harriet (Wemore) Munson, from New York to Iowa, where he built up his present strong constitution working in the harvest fields of the paternal farm, and where he eventually graduated from the High School of Grinnell, Poweshiek County. Developing tendencies towards a broader life than was possible in the pursuit of agriculture, he took up the study of medicine in the Minnesota State University Medical College, and in 1890 graduated from the Hahnemann Medical College of Chicago. After practicing medicine and surgery four years in Wisconsin, he took a course in the Chicago Post Graduate College, and in 1894, located in Rushville, which has since been his home. While traveling in Europe in 1897, Dr. Munson specialized in investigation along the lines of eye and ear surgery.

At Princeton, Mo., in 1880, Dr. Munson was united in marriage to Jennie C. Cleary, and of this union there are three children: Helen, Mary and Harriet. The Doctor is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he is an active worker. For a time he was President of the Epworth League, and in other ways he has sought to promote religious development and aid evangelistic effort among the people of his adopted town. A genial and sympathetic personality, a philosophy which tends to optimism, and the use of mental and other simple aids in connection with the healing art, have given him a warm and abiding place in the hearts of a large number of patrons.

NALL, James R., a well known and skillful builder and contractor, of Rushville, Ill., was born in Rushville Township, Schuyler County, Ill., September 29, 1856. He is a son of Charles H. and Elizabeth (Chick) Nall, natives of Kentucky and Indiana, respectively. The paternal grandfather was Gabriel J. Nall, of Woodford County, Ky., where he was born in 1788. Charles H. Nall, who was born October 25, 1823, came with his father, Gabriel J., from Kentucky to Schuyler County, Ill., in 1831. Elizabeth (Chick) Nall, his wife, was born in Rushville, Ind., and came with her father, James Chick, to Schuyler County, the latter being one of the earliest settlers of the county, arriving in 1836. He located on the farm, in Rushville Township, now owned by W. L. Demaree, and followed farming during the remainder of his life, dying in 1859 or 1860. He was a charter member of the first Masonic Lodge in the county. For many years he was a teacher in the district schools, in connection with his farming operations. After his death his widow went to Grayson County, Tex., where she passed her last days. By occupation Charles H. Nall was a cooper, having learned that trade after coming to Schuyler County, where he followed coopering and farming together until the time of his death, March 8, 1881. He was a man of quiet disposition and unobtrusive manners, thoroughly domestic in his tastes and inclinations, and preferring the home circle above all other attractions. His family consisted of four sons and two daughters, namely: Henry and Fannie, deceased; Richard, who died in infancy; James R.; Lewis, who is a millwright by trade, and lives at Billings, Mont.; and Nettie, wife of Gorge E. Day, R. F. D., at Ray, Schuyler County. Politically, Charles H. Nall was the only Republican among the many members of the Nall family to which he belonged. He was upright and dutiful in all the relations of life, and an exemplary member of the community.

The early life of James R. Nall was spent on the home farm, where he remained until 1881, and his education was obtained in the district schools of the vicinity. In 1882, he went to work with Richard Day, a well known citizen, in order to learn the trade of a carpenter, and continued in his employ for about three years. After his marriage he made his home on the farm in Oakland Township until 1892, when he bought the place where he now lives, consisting of a very attractive residence, with eleven acres of ground, situated just north of Rushville. The marriage of Mr. Nall took place March 5, 1884, on which date he was wedded to Laura Harmon, who was born near Rushville, October 14, 1859. Mrs. Nall is a daughter of John and Martha Ann (Ellis) Harmon. (Particulars in regard to the Ellis family may be found in a biographical record of James D. Ellis, appearing on another page of this volume.) John F. Harmon was a native of Boone County, Ky., who became a resident of Schuyler County, Ill., early in the last century. For many years he was engaged in teaching school, and on the outbreak of the Civil War, enlisted and went with his regiment to Vicksburg. There, being seized with sickness, he died, and his remains are lying in an unknown grave. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Nall resulted in one child, Annie Delle, born March 20, 1885, who has received a thorough classical and musical education. She is now employed in the capacity of bookkeeper in the establishment of Wilson & Co. She is a member of the Christian Church, of Rushville, as is also her mother, a woman of many excellent traits of character.

In 1892, Mr. Nall turned his attention to contracting and building, and many of the finest business blocks and private residences in Rushville and the surrounding country are the result of his skill. Among these are the Vedder Block, and the "Times" Building, in Rushville, with others, which will long stand as monuments of his architectural and mechanical ingenuity.

In politics, Mr. Nall has always been active in behalf of the success of the Republican party, but has never entertained any desire for public office. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the Mystic Workers. He is one of the most prominent and favorably known citizens of his locality.

NAUGHT, George W.—The fine old pioneer family of Naught, so numerous scattered over the fertile lands of Schuyler County, Ill., in no sense loses its dignity or influence in the career of George W. Naught, a representative of the third generation in the Central West, and the owner of a farm of 120 acres in Section 16, Woodstock Township. Mr. Naught was born on Section 36, Woodstock Township, February 25, 1865, and his youth was passed among far different surroundings than confronted his father, George Naught, who was born in White County, Ill., in 1822, and came with his parents to Schuyler County in 1824. Isaac Naught, father of George, was a canny Scotchman who in youth had crossed the sea and settled in Tennessee, his death occurring in Pike County, Ill., at the age of sixty-six years. Woodstock Township in 1824 was still a happy hunting ground for the Indian, abounding in game, the well worn trail, and the simple wigwam. The paleface was regarded as an intruder, and the lives of the settlers were often in danger. In his rude hut in the primeval timber Isaac reared his family to useful manhood, and George, like the rest of the children, worked hard and had very few advantages as advantages are now understood. Their home was a great curiosity to the more friendly Indians, and to such an extent did they crowd its room and hospitality, that they had to be driven out in order to make a place for the rightful occupants. Finally they were persuaded to seek other habitations and crossed the creek below Greenwell's Mill, on the Lemolie River, then known as Crooked Creek. When George Naught drove with his grain to the William McKee Mill, north of Rushville, that community consisted of one little log cabin, occupied by some daring invader of the wilderness. It was the privilege of Isaac Naught to witness and participate in the changes which took place between his arrival in 1824, and his death in 1886, and to accumulate a fair competence through industry and good judgment. He left the legacy of a good name, a noble purpose, and an example of fairness and consideration, traits that are expressed in the general character of the family which profited by his kindness and oversight. Of these children, James has been a resident of Omaha for twenty-two years; Philip died December 30, 1905; Lizzie occupies the old home with her mother, and is unmarried; and Catherine and Nancy are twins, the former being the wife of William R. Davis, residing near Sugar Grove, Woodstock Township.

George W. Naught has harbored no aspirations not in accord with the occupation of his forefathers. To him farming is a noble and satisfying pursuit and one in which he takes infinite pleasure and pride. He remained on the home place until his marriage, November 10, 1886, to Minnie Strummel, daughter of George Strummel, a native of Germany, and one of the pioneers of Schuyler County. The young people settled on a rented farm in Woodstock Township, and at the end of five years Mr. Naught purchased 120 acres of land in Section 16, known as the Magruder farm, the sole improvements upon which were a log house and a small barn. In this log cabin the family lived until 1901, when the present modern residence was erected, the property now being one of the best improved in the neighborhood. The owner is interested in stock raising on a small scale, and has a good grade of cattle, hogs and horses. His fences and buildings are kept in good repair, and the visitor is impressed with the general neatness and method which characterize the place.

In politics, Mr. Naught is a Democrat, and he has filled several offices of local importance. Fraternally, he is identified with the Modern Woodmen of America, Camp 308, of Rushville, and in religion, he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. and Mrs. Naught are the parents of four children: Esther, born September 26, 1887, a graduate of the Rushville Normal, and an educator of note; Dwight, born April 20, 1890; Mabel, born February 18, 1894; and Harold, born January 6, 1903. Mr. Naught is upright and honorable, a genial companion, kind to children and animals, and in favor of all measures for the improvement of the conditions by which he is surrounded.

NELSON, Andrew H.—The family of Andrew H. Nelson, of Rushville Township, Schuyler County, Ill., was established in America long before the discontent of the Colonists culminated in the Revolutionary War. When that time came, his paternal grandfather, Thomas Nelson, a farmer by occupation, presumably in Pennsylvania, exchanged his implements of husbandry for weapons of destruction, and followed the martial fortunes of the illustrious Washington for seven years. During that time he fought on the principal battlefields of the memorable conflict. The maternal grandfather, Benjamin Teel, was also a soldier in the Revolutionary War, serving from start to finish. Henry Nelson, father of Andrew H., was born in Pennsylvania in 1801, and married Mary Ann Teel. He was a weaver by trade, but when he came to Rushville Township in 1837 he devoted himself to farming, continuing thus until shortly before his death, in 1864.

Andrew H. Nelson was born May 15, 1834, being three years old when his family arrived in Rushville Township. His early training and education did not differ from those of the sons of other settlers, and he was early expected to make his work count and to contribute his share towards the support of the family. His life passed uneventfully until the breaking out of the Civil War. On May 7, 1861, he enlisted in Company G, Sixteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was one of the first men of Schuyler County to leave for the front. He participated in many of the important battles of the war, and was honorably discharged from the service June 17, 1864. The following year, on December 25, he married Eliza Ann Allen, a daughter of Zethemiah Allen, an early settler and prominent farmer of Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson have had nine children, namely: William Henry, Allen Z., Lena May, Charles K., Edward B., Stella L., Thomas B., Harry E., and one who died in infancy. Lena May, Stella L., and Thomas B. are deceased.

Mr. Nelson is a member of the Christian Church, of Rushville Township, and a liberal contributor towards its support. His farming operations have been attended with success. He is the owner of 160 acres of fine land, and is recognized as one of the most prosperous farmers and useful citizens of his locality.

ODENWELLER, John L.—The career of John L. Odenweller has been dignified by industry, perseverance and fair dealing, and by praiseworthy efforts to secure the just and peaceful rewards of toil. Economy and thrift have made him the owner of a splendid farm of 160 acres in Section 12, Bainbridge Township, and his contribution to the well being of the State assumes still more substantial proportions in his family of educated, cultivated, and refined sons and daughters, all of whom inherit his tendency towards noble and useful citizenship. Mr. Odenweller was born in Macomb, McDonough County, Ill., July 17, 1850, and is a son of Leonard and Elizabeth (Danley) Odenweller.

Leonard Odenweller was born in Baden, Germany, in 1815, and came to America about 1836. In his native land he had learned the locksmith and blacksmith trades, and followed the same in

Gas Yarbrough

Philadelphia, and later in Dayton, Ohio. In the latter city he married, and soon after moved to Macomb, Ill., where he worked at his trades, and in time bought land in Scotland and Industry Townships. On his land he maintained a busy blacksmith shop in connection with farming, and at one time owned 450 acres, being one of the foremost farmers and business men in the townships which he represented. His last years were spent in retirement in the city of Macomb, where his death occurred in 1887, his wife surviving him until 1889. Of the ten children in this family three died in infancy, and seven are living at the present time, viz.: Rev. Thomas E., of Iowa; John L.; Simon P., of Macomb; Richard A., of Pleasanton, Kan.; Isaiah, for many years a prominent citizen of Macomb, but now living in Winfield, Kan.; Mary M., wife of J. M. Miller, of Graham, Mo.; and Lucinda H., wife of Michael M. Montgomery, of Shelbyville, Ill.

The success of his father permitted John L. Odenweller to acquire a much better education than the average country reared boy. He attended the district schools, the old Macomb Normal and Abingdon College, and for two or three years taught the school near his home. He also taught in Schuyler County, and while thus engaged met and married Lucinda H. Bellomy, a native of Frederick Township, and daughter of Thomas Bellamy, a Schuyler County pioneer. For a time Mr. Odenweller was engaged in the grocery business in Sciota, Ill., and in 1881 located permanently in Schuyler County, purchasing in Section 12, Bainbridge Township, 160 acres of partially improved land. The industry of the owner has brought about remarkable changes, and it is doubtful if in the length and breadth of the county is to be found a more homelike, profitable and pleasant farm. The mechanical ingenuity of Mr. Odenweller has been of incalculable benefit to him in making improvements, and his trained mind has known how to spend his time and money to the best possible advantage. Of horticulture he has made a scientific study, and he takes particular delight in a seven-acre orchard, and two acres of small fruits. He also follows general farming, and has some excellent stock about his place. Method, economy, industry and faithfulness are the keynotes of his success, and the happy co-operation of his family has furnished an incentive often wanting in even the most prosperous of homes.

Politically a Republican, Mr. Odenweller is by no means a partisan, and he has steadfastly refused all proffers of official recognition. He is fraternally connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and finds a religious home in the Christian Church. A great grief overshadowed the Odenweller home March 7, 1902, when occurred the death of the beloved mother of the four children, and the helpmate of a fond husband. In this emergency Elsie L., the oldest daughter, terminated three years of successful teaching to assume the duties of housekeeping. She was born in McDonough County, Ill., October 22, 1877, is a graduate of the Frederick High School, and attended Eureka College during the season of 1897-8. Arthur L., the oldest son in the family, was born February 1, 1879, and he graduated from the Western Illinois State Normal, in the Class of 1907; Eula L., born September 26, 1880, was killed in a runaway accident July 28, 1903. Claude B., born October 4, 1881, is a graduate of the Western Illinois State Normal, Class of 1906, and married Hattie H. Hesser, of St. Louis, Mo., and has one child, Byron Hesser Odenweller, born March 20, 1907. Claude B. is living on the home farm with his father, and is an active and capable young farmer. The entire family are held in the highest esteem, and represent the intellectual, well bred and thoroughly informed element in the community.

ORR, Henry, whose life in Schuyler County, Ill., is contemporaneous with nearly all the stages of the county's development from a barren wild, and who is known to most of its older residents as one of its most successful farmers and stock raisers, was born not far from his present home in Bainbridge Township, May 15, 1844. He lives in Section 9, and his birthplace is in Section 16. Mr. Orr is a son of Joseph and Mary (Burnside) Orr, natives of County Tyrone, Ireland, where they were reared, and married. Joseph Orr and his wife came to the United States at an early period, and proceeding to Schuyler County, Ill., settled in Section 16, Bainbridge Township, about the year 1837. Here they endured all the privations and hardships of pioneer life, confronting perils from Indians and ravenous animals, and in course of time the father cleared and tilled his land, building in place of the primitive log cabin a comfortable dwelling in which the worthy couple spent the remainder of their days. Two of their children were born in Ireland, namely, Jane and Mary. Jane became the wife of Simon Reeve, whose life is depicted elsewhere in this volume, and Mary married S. B. Vaughan, a farmer of Bainbridge Township. Of those born in this country, Ellen and Lily died in infancy. Joseph Orr died August, 1895, at the age of ninety-five years and five months. He was a man of great force of character, generous impulses, intense public spirit, and in every respect, a model citizen. His wife was eighty-five years old when she passed away. In religious faith, she was a devout Presbyterian.

Henry Orr was reared on the farm, and received his early education in the log school house in the vicinity, of whose slab seats and unglazed windows he has a vivid recollection. He assisted his father until he reached the age of twenty-three years, taking charge of the home place at that time. In 1885 he bought twenty acres of land, afterwards purchasing one hundred acres more, in Section 9, Bainbridge Township, which was partly improved and contained a log cabin, most of it, however, being heavily timbered. Mr. Orr applied himself to the arduous task of clearing the ground of its dense growth, and after getting a part of it under the plow, built a two-story frame house on the site of the log cabin.

To his original purchase of twenty acres, he added from time to time, until he is now the owner of 215 acres in one body, lying in Sections 9 and 16, Bainbridge Township. His farming operations have been very successful, but he is recognized not only as a prosperous and substantial farmer and stock raiser, his standing as a public spirited, enterprising and useful citizen being also acknowledged throughout the community. During all his long participation in the affairs of the township, he has been one of the most earnest supporters of the church and school, and has always done his full share in promoting every measure intended to advance the general welfare.

In 1867, Mr. Orr was united in marriage with Margaret Bowlin, who was born in Bainbridge Township, and is a daughter of John and Louisa Bowlin, natives of Kentucky. The following children resulted from this union, namely: Ernest, Dora, Delvan, S. B. and Cora. Ernest married Sarah Lenover, and is the father of three children—Stella, Nellie, and Melvin, who has charge of the farm of Henry Reeve. Dora, deceased wife of Charles Ackers, left seven children—Homer, Henry, Earl, Owen, Bertha and Buster Codry, of whom the last named makes his home with Mr. Orr. Delvan married Lily Lawler, who has borne him four children—John Henry, Sarah M., Harvey and Thomas. S. B. married Lenora Rittenhouse, by whom he has one son, William H., a farmer in Bainbridge Township. Cora is the wife of Emory Payne, who follows farming in Littleton Township, Schuyler County. The living descendants of Henry and Margaret (Bowlin) Orr, now number nineteen, of whom fifteen are grandchildren.

Politically, Mr. Orr is a supporter of Democratic principles, but the sympathies of Mrs. Orr, who is a woman of uncommon intelligence and deep reflection, are with the Republican party. Both husband and wife are highly esteemed by a large acquaintance.

PARKE, Overton.—The association of the Parke family with the landed interests of Illinois dates back to the year 1830, when a stalwart young Kentuckian, Oliver H. P. Parke (better known as Perry Parke) came from his home in the Blue Grass State on a tour of inspection through what was then known as the frontier. The appearance of the country pleased him and his keen foresight discerned great possibilities in its future development. Shortly after his arrival in Brown County, Ill., he purchased a tract of wild land for $1.25 per acre, after which he returned to Kentucky. His native place was near Richmond, Madison County, where he was born in 1813, and where also his wife, Mary Logsdon, was born and reared. They were married in 1834 and their wedding trip comprised a journey by steamer down the Ohio river and up the Mississippi, then up the Illinois River to a convenient landing place known as Legraue, from which they traveled by wagon to the home of his cousin. His first task was the building of a log cabin; his next, the clearing and developing of a farm. Selling out in 1849, he came to Schuyler County and bought an unimproved tract of eighty acres. In addition, he bought 160 acres at the solicitation of his sons, who agreed to stay with him until the quarter section had been paid for. Fortunately, this proved an easy task, as the heavy timber on the land soon paid for the entire property.

From the time of his permanent settlement in Illinois in 1834, until his death in 1892, Perry Parke was privileged to witness many changes. Looking around him at the improved lands, neat buildings, prosperous villages and contented people, he could truly say as a pioneer, "All of which I saw and part of which I was." It is to such men as he that Schuyler County owes its prestige as one of the finest farming communities in the State. He and his wife, who survived him only about one year, had a large family, seven of whom attained mature years, namely: Amelia A.; Talithia, who married John H. Black, a farmer living on Section 12, Woodstock Township; Elizabeth, who married Thomas Kirby, of Beardstown, Ill.; Lucy A., wife of William Allen, a retired farmer; Elbert, a resident of Kewanee, Ill.; William J., living in Kit Carson County, Col.; and Overton, who was born in Brown County, Ill., October 8, 1841, and now lives in Section 11, Woodstock Township, his farm lying on the line of the rural free delivery from Cooperstown.

At the age of eight years Overton Parke accompanied his parents to Schuyler County, where he received a common school education. On August 11, 1862, he enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Fifteenth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and for three years he remained at the front. Shortly after his enlistment he suffered an illness when in camp at Daville, Ky., and for seven weeks was in a hospital at Louisville. On recovering his health he accompanied his regiment in its marches in the south and participated in the engagements at Chickamauga, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca and Dalton, as well as many minor skirmishes. June 11, 1865, he was mustered out of service in East Tennessee, and on the 3d of July he arrived at home, which he had not visited during his absence of three years.

The marriage of Overton Parke and Rosauna Reddick was solemnized November 1, 1866, and the young couple began housekeeping at the old Parke homestead, but in 1872 moved to their present farm. Mrs. Parke was born in Bainbridge Township, and was first seen by Mr. Parke when she was sitting on her mother's lap in church. They have five children now living, namely: John E., who married Blanche Taylor and lives on a farm in Woodstock Township; Maggie; Elizabeth, who married Frederick Logsdon, a farmer of Brown County, Ill.; Nettie, who has been engaged in teaching in the district schools of the county; and Rosa C. (Mrs. Quinn) who lives on a farm in Brown County. Six children died in infancy.

The Parke farm consists of 260 acres in one body and bears first-class improvements, with every facility for the extensive feeding of hogs and cattle, of which Mr. Parke keeps only the finest grades. The residence is a two-story, frame building with a double "L." There are three barns, 42x62, 60x60 and 24x48 feet, respectively, the last being a cow-barn enclosed with sheds at one end and on both sides. It is the owner's ambition to maintain a farm surpassed by none, and he spares no pains in his effort to keep the soil under first-class cultivation and the buildings in good repair. While neglecting no duty connected with the maintenance of the place, he has discharged also the duties devolving upon him as a patriotic citizen, has aided in building up the roads of the township and in promoting the welfare of the schools. Politically, he votes with the Republican party. In religious associations he and his wife have been members of the Union Baptist church for more than half a century, and they have been liberal contributors to its maintenance, as well as to the relief of those in need. On the organization of the Patrons of Husbandry, Mr. Parke became one of its charter members, and he has also been quite active in the work of the Grand Army Post at Rushville, with which he has been identified for years. Accommodating in his association with neighbors, kindly in disposition, earnest in religious life, sincere in devotion to country and loyal to the upbuilding of the township, he furnishes an illustration of what may be accomplished by our progressive farmers and loyal patriotic citizens.

PECK, James E.—Pride in her self made, well made men, appreciation of the obstacles which they have encountered on their road to success, and gratitude for the inestimable boon of their attainments and presence in her midst, is one of the strongest claims to outside consideration known to the people of Schuyler County. When, in addition to marked success in some practical department of activity, a man expresses many sided general capacity, is a power in clean politics and government, a promoter of education, benevolence, ethics and temperate living, he has become an example by which the youth of the community may richly profit. Such a one is James E. Peck, an extensive stock and grain raiser, owner of 380 acres of land in Section 36, Oakland Township, a prominent Prohibitionist, and an active member and worker in the Free Methodist Church.

A substantial monument to the enterprise and standing of this family is Peckville, Lackawanna County, Penn., where during the Civil War, Samuel Peck, father of James E., took for debt the Jessup coal lands, which he operated in connections with sawmilling and merchandising for many years. Mr. Peck was an exponent of New England thrift and sagacity, a native of Massachusetts, and a settler in Lackawanna County in the early part of his life. His operations were conducted along strictly legitimate and progressive lines, and he was not only the civic father of Peckville, but its most enthusiastic and substantial promoter. His lumbering business was so extensive that the mills were often kept running until late at night. He became one of the wealthy and influential men of that part of Pennsylvania, was a leader in politics and religion, and was especially active in the Presbyterian Church, in which faith his busy life drew to a close July 7, 1864. He was twice married, and there were ten children of the first union, the majority of whom still live in Pennsylvania, and are among the leading coal operators of Peckville and Scranton. For his second wife Mr. Peck married Anna Bertholt, a native of New Jersey, and James E. is the only child of this union. Mrs. Peck's father sold his wagon manufactory in New Jersey, and in 1849 joined the caravan of fortune seekers bound for the Pacific coast. He was fairly successful as a miner and mechanic, and in 1852 came to Schuyler County, where he spent the remainder of his life on a farm in Rushville Township.

James E. Peck was three years old when he came to Schuyler County with his mother, and thereafter, for nine terms she taught school in what was known as the Christian Neck school-house in Rushville Township. When James E. was four years old he used to accompany his mother to the little log school, and they eventually bought forty acres of land, where began the active farming life of the boy. He knew little of actual leisure, for the income of the school teacher was meager, and the little fellow, at the age of twelve years, planted twelve acres of corn, tended and cut it. From then on no advantages glided noiselessly into his life, and responsibilities fell thick and fast around him. After his mother's second marriage (to David Harris) he kept bachelor hall on the little farm in Section 2, Rushville Township, doing his own cooking, washing and ironing, and even making his own clothes. His step-father dying, his mother returned to make her home with her son, and here her death occurred in August, 1886. She was a devout Christian woman, of lovable nature, and deeply interested in the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which she was a teacher in the Sunday school for many years.

His mother gone from him, and his fortunes risen somewhat through his industry and thrift, Mr. Peck married, May 29, 1888, Mary I. Ross, who was born in Buena Vista Township, January 9, 1869, a daughter of Rev. William B. Ross, whose family history see elsewhere in this work. Before his marriage Mr. Peck added forty acres to his original farm, making eighty acres. In 1889 he bought 220 acres in Section 36, Oakland Township, and in 1900 added to it 160 acres, making 380 in one body. In 1906 he sold his Rushville Township property, and devotes his time entirely to his larger estate. For many years he has rented large tracts of land, and in 1907 realized $4,000.00 from live stock, and after disposing of large quantities of general produce, still has on hand in storage a thousand bushels of wheat. In raising hogs, he makes a specialty of the Poland-China breed. As a general farmer and stock raiser, he stands well in the county. Underlying his farm is a thirty-inch vein of as fine coal as is to be found in this section, thus rendering his property of much more than average value. The improvements of Mr. Peck have been carefully considered and are thoroughly practical in their nature. He is a conscientious student of the science of his vocation, and his methods are those of a man who has given profound thought to the little as well as larger things of life.

Politically, Mr. Peck is one of the strongest Prohibitionists in the State. His first presidential vote was cast for James G. Blaine, but he soon after became interested in temperance, and the cause since has enlisted his serious and practical efforts. He was a delegate to the national convention at Indianapolis, Ind., in 1904, when Swallow, of Pennsylvania, and Carroll, of Texas, were nominated, and for several years he was chairman of the County Central Committee of the Prohibition party, resigning from the same on account of unsatisfactory health and multiplicity of other obligations. He is a fluent and forceful speaker, has splendid command of the temperance situation, and his services are enlisted upon all important State and National occasions of the cause. He has been equally prominent in the Free Methodist Church, which he joined upon attaining his majority, and in which he acted as an official at Christian Neck, serving as recording steward several years. During the past fifteen years he has also served as class leader, steward, exhorter, a frequent delegate to Annual Conferences, and a member of the standing committee.

Mr. Peck is a great lover of sports and the great out of doors, and is one of the most expert rifle shots in the State. As a small boy his mother encouraged his tendency towards marksmanship by presenting him with a gun, and it has ever since been his chief diversion. In 1880 he went to Fort Smith, Ark., upon a hunting and trapping expedition, and remained in the enjoyment of the sport for a year. In the spring of that year marksmen and hunters from all over Arkansas arranged a meet at Fort Smith, but Mr. Peck's gun was ruled out and he was obliged to shoot with their guns. He won an undisputed victory over all there assembled, thus adding to many other laurels already won by his superior marksmanship. Personally, Mr. Peck is popular and well liked, and he has many warm friends throughout the county and State. He is regarded as one of the influential and broadly useful citizens of Schuyler County.

PEMBERTON, Judge Ephraim John. (deceased).—From the time of his admission to the Bar of Illinois in December, 1861, Ephraim John Pemberton was an increasingly important factor in law, politics, education and good government in Rushville. In the life of this County Judge of more than a decade and old time practitioner, are many lessons of vital worth for the young man about to embark upon a legal career. Chief among these is the necessity for an earnest and absorbing purpose, and a determination to invest the calling with the best that work and brain can accomplish. The habits of thrift, and the economy of time and labor and industry, which rendered Judge Pemberton so useful a citizen, were fostered and developed on a farm in Illinois to which he came with his parents when a year old from Knox County, Ky., where he was born April 13, 1834. His father, Thomas Pemberton, was a native of West Virginia, and his mother, Deborah (Moore) Pemberton, was born in North Carolina. The family settled on land in Oakland Township, Schuyler County, where Ephraim gained his first knowledge of books in the subscription schools, and which surroundings he eventually outgrew, to embark upon the more strenuous business of legal procedure.

At an early stage in his professional career, Mr. Pemberton became interested in politics, readily discerning that the most superior compensations of his calling went hand in hand with party affairs. He began to practice during the first year of the Civil War, and in September of the last year of the war, he was elected County Judge of Schuyler County on the Democratic ticket, and served continuously for seventeen years.

In addition to a general practice of law, he served as Justice of the Peace, member of the Town or City Council, and member of the Board of Trustees of the Rushville Union School for many years. His services were characterized by conscientiousness, more than average insight and intelligence, and faithfulness to whatsoever might contribute to the permanent well being of the community. He had a thorough grasp of the technicalities and intricacies of law, and of their application to the various complications which come up for adjustment. As a judge his rulings were rarely contested, and were invariably moderate, wide and according to the law.

The marriage of Judge Pemberton and Tennessee J. Hills was solemnized April 2, 1862, Mrs. Pemberton being a native of Schuyler County, and educated in its district schools. Mrs. Pemberton departed this life March 28, 1881, leaving three children: Henry T., Effie L., and Nora J., the latter of whom is deceased. Judge Pemberton was one of the very familiar figures upon the streets and in the courts of Rushville, and it is safe to say that no professional man in the town was a more dignified or upright acquisition to the calling. He invariably stood for conservative, thoughtful progress, and was never known to let his enthusiasm or desire for publicity bias or mislead his judgment. He died of pneumonia, February 27, 1907, after an illness of five days, aged seventy-two years, ten months and fourteen days. The surviving members of the family are: Henry J., Effie L. (Mrs. Dieterich), and a granddaughter, Nora J. Kerr.

PEMBERTON, Henry T.—Of the native sons who owe their education, business prosperity and social prominence to the opportunities afforded by the city of Rushville, Ill., none is more favorably known than H. T. Pemberton, real estate broker, Justice of the Peace, and prominent in all the relations of a citizen. Mr. Pemberton was born December 13, 1863, and is a son of Ephraim and Tennessee J. (Hills) Pemberton, of Knox County, Ky., and Schuyler County, Ill., respectively. He is a grandson of Thomas and Deborah (Moore) Pemberton, the former born in West Virginia, and the latter in North Carolina. Of his father, Judge Ephraim J. Pemberton (deceased), who was Judge of the County Court of Schuyler County for seventeen years, extended mention is made elsewhere in this work.

Mr. Pemberton completed his education in the public schools of Rushville, and some years afterwards embarked in the real estate business. Since early manhood he has taken a keen interest in politics, in behalf of the Democratic party. He was elected Justice of the Peace in 1901, and re-elected in 1905. From 1903 until 1905, he served as a member of the City Council of Rushville. Mr. Pemberton stands high in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and has been a member of the Grand Lodge since 1901, at present serving as a member of its committee on legislation. He was grand marshal of the order during 1896-97. He is also identified with the Knights of Pythias. Mr. Pemberton is a wide-awake and enterprising man. He has materially promoted the enhancement of real estate interests in the city and county, and enjoys the respect and good will of all who know him, his acquaintance in business and fraternal circles being extensive in its range.

PERSHING, Charles T., a retired farmer, of substantial means and high character, whose residence in Schuyler County, Ill., covers a period of more than half a century, and who is perhaps the oldest of its honored veterans of the Civil War, is passing his declining years in retirement on his fine farm in Section 7, Littleton Township. Mr. Pershing bears a name long identified with the agricultural interests of the Eastern States, the Pennsylvania farm cultivated by his great-grandfather still being in possession of the family. He was born in Westmoreland County, Pa., February 18, 1829, and is a son of John and Margaret (Funk) Pershing, natives of Pennsylvania. His paternal grandparents, Conrad and Mary A. (Alton) Pershing, were also born in Pennsylvania (then one of the original thirteen colonies), the former, in 1766, and the latter, in 1771. Grandmother Pershing died in 1823. The great-grandparents on the paternal side, Frederick and Elizabeth (Weyant) Pershing, were natives of Alsace (at that time French territory), the birth of the great-grandmother having occurred in 1724. She came from France to Baltimore during the same year in which her husband emigrated,—about the middle of the eighteenth century,—and their marriage took place in that city, the great-grandfather being obliged to work for 21 months after his arrival, in order to repay the expenses of his voyage to America. Frederick Pershing afterwards bought a farm in Frederick County, Md., where he lived several years, and on which he and his wife became the parents of a family of five sons and three daughters. At a later period, he crossed the Allegheny Mountains on foot, traveling to the then "Far West," the journey consuming fourteen days. On reaching his destination, he took up a "tomahawk" claim of 240 acres in Westmoreland County, Pa., among the pine and oak forests, but did not receive the final papers for the patent on the tract until after the Revolutionary War. Fort Ligonier was the nearest trading post to his claim, and "his next door neighbor" was three miles distant. He built a very crude and uncouth log house in the midst of the wilderness, without windows, and with a puncheon floor and a stick and mud chimney, and in the spring of 1779, moved into this primitive abode with his family. Wild deer mingled with the cows, and hunting game was the principal occupation followed by the early settlers of that region. Indians lurked in every direction, committing many depredations, and often perpetrating murderous atrocities. Frederick Pershing died in 1778. His four sons and his nephew made his coffin out of a white-oak log, by splitting it into two parts, and hewing out or adzing the larger half as a receptacle for his body, and shaping the smaller part for use as a lid. His remains, together with those of his wife, rest in what is known now as Smith Cemetery, about a mile west of the Pershing home. Grandfather Conrad Pershing obtained 100 acres of his father's farm, by purchase, and spent the rest of his life there, dying in 1842. John Pershing, father of Charles T., was born on the old homestead, where he remained until 1854, when he came to Illinois, locating in Hancock County. He bought 160 acres of land in Durham Township, in that county, on which he was engaged in farming until the time of his death. His wife, Margaret (Funk) Pershing, survived him but one year. They were the parents of eight sons and three daughters, Charles T. being the seventh in order of birth. Of this family, five sons and one daughter are still living.

Charles T. Pershing stayed on the old home farm in Pennsylvania until he reached the age of 22 years, receiving his education in the district schools of Westmoreland County. Then he commenced working by the month, continuing thus until 1853, when he made a trip to Rock Island County, Ill., in quest of information concerning the prospects afforded by that locality. Returning to Pennsylvania, he remained in his native State until his marriage. Shortly after this event, he started west with his wife, journeying by way of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers as far as Warsaw, Hancock County, Ill., where he worked one season. In the fall of 1855 he moved to Schuyler County, Ill., buying thirty-four acres of land in Section 7, Littleton Township, which was partially covered with brush. Fifteen acres of it had been cleared, and on this portion had been built a log cabin. From time to time he made additions to his original purchase, until he became the owner of 350 acres of land, all lying in Littleton Township, except 40 acres. This place he gradually improved, putting up substantial and convenient buildings, and developing the property into one of the finest farms in this part of Central Illinois. Besides general farming his attention has been devoted to raising cattle and hogs, and in both undertakings, profitable results have been the reward of his labors. Finally he abandoned active exertions, and in recent years has spent his time in restful leisure on his farm. Mr. Pershing was a soldier in the great struggle for the preservation of the Union, having enlisted in Company I, Sixty-second Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in February, 1862. His army service was largely confined to guard duty in Tennessee and Mississippi, and at various points throughout the South. On December 27, 1862, he was taken prisoner, and after being paroled, was sent to St. Louis, Mo., where he was honorably discharged, on account of disability in May, 1863.

The marriage of Mr. Pershing took place February 18, 1855, in Westmoreland County, Pa., on which date Mary A. Poorman, a woman of most excellent traits of character, became his wife. Mrs. Pershing is a native of the last mentioned county, and a daughter of Jacob and Catherine (Kuntz) Poorman. This union resulted in two children, namely: Vincent R., born April 10, 1856; and Jacob P., born February 8, 1858. Neither has ever married, and both dwell under the parental roof.

In politics, Mr. Pershing has been identified with the Republican party since its organization. He is one of the oldest members of the Grand Army of the Republic. He and his worthy wife are communicants of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he has officiated as trustee and superintendent of the Sunday school. Both are held in profound respect by a host of friends throughout Schuyler County.

PICKINPAUGH, John.—The improved farm lying on Section 4, Camden Township, Schuyler County, Ill., comprises 245 acres, and is the property of John Pickinpaugh, who purchased forty acres in 1867 and since then has enlarged his possessions to their present area. The family of which he is a member came from Germany and he represents the third generation in America. His father, Peter, was a native of Virginia, who moved to Ohio in early life, entered land in what is now Noble County, taking out the patent from the Government and remaining on the property until his death in 1881, at the age of eighty-one. The money paid for the entry of land he earned by splitting rails at twenty-five cents per hundred. A man of robust physique and sturdy constitution, he retained his strength to hale old age, and when he was seventy-nine he split a hundred rails one afternoon besides doing his regular chores the same evening. His wife, who passed away thirty years prior to his demise, bore the maiden name of Jane Phillips and was born in Ohio, of Irish ancestry.

The family of Peter Pickinpaugh consisted of seven sons and three daughters, namely: Jacob W., who was born in 1829 and for years has been a leading business man at Plano, Ia.; Mary, a resident of Sharon, Noble County, Ohio, where her husband, John Wiley, died; John, who was born in what is now Noble (then Morgan) County, Ohio, February 13, 1833; George, who enlisted in the One Hundred and Sixteenth Ohio Infantry during the Civil War, and died at Shepherdstown, W. Va., prior to the expiration of his term of service; Hannah, who married Walter Leonard, of Pennsylvania, and is now deceased; Enoch, who died at eight years of age; William, deceased; Jonathan R., who died at Louisville, Ky., while with an Ohio regiment in the service of the Union; Margaret, deceased, formerly the wife of Henry Foster, of Noble County, Ohio; and Adam Fletcher, who occupies the old homestead in that county.

It was not possible for John Pickinpaugh to enjoy first-class educational advantages, for schools were few in his boyhood and methods of instruction were crude; yet he has acquired a broad fund of information through his own efforts. At the age of nineteen he bought his time from his father, paying for the same with $200, to be taken out of his share of the estate. His first work was the mastering of the carpenter's trade, in which work he was paid 62½ cents per day. Later he was employed to cut wood for 20 cents per cord, and by diligent application was able to cut three cords a day, but he never received any pay for this labor. In one day he split 1,000 three-foot clapboards and shaved 200, receiving for the day's work 62½ cents.

A visit to the west in 1853 brought Mr. Pickinpaugh nothing but the fever and ague, so he returned home the following year. However, he was not satisfied to remain and the year 1855 found him in Illinois, where he settled in Schuyler County. In 1856 he bought a sawmill, in the operation of which he rapidly accumulated money. The first mill was sold in 1857 and he bought a mill at Pleasantview, Ill., for which he paid $1,000. This he continued to operate until the outbreak of the Civil War, when he enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Fifteenth Illinois Infantry, and accompanying the regiment to the front, remained in active service until the close of the war in 1865. Meanwhile he had been transferred to the Fourth Battalion, thence to the United States Engineers, where he remained for one year, and under the commission of tool sergeant had charge of all the tools.

Upon receiving an honorable discharge from the army at Chattanooga, Tenn., Mr. Pickin-

paugh returned to Pleasantview, Ill., and found that his mill had been destroyed and the machinery sold for old iron. The only part which he could find was one belt and this he sold, but never received pay for the same. Forced to start anew in the world, in 1867 he moved to Camden Township and operated a sawmill, also buying forty acres of farm land, to which he added from time to time until he now owns 245 acres in one body. His first marriage took place November 12, 1857, and united him with Rachel Gragg, who died October 14, 1877. Five children were born of that union, namely: Millard; Marion, a farmer in Camden Township; Minerva Jane, who died in 1887; Annie E., who is married and lives at Rushville, Schuyler County; and George T., who manages the home farm and also operates a sawmill. On March 10, 1880, John Pickinpaugh married Mrs. Mary J. (Rogers) Lorge, who died August 15, 1898. The first and second wives were both earnest Christian women, devoted members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and beloved by a large circle of friends. For years Mr. Pickinpaugh has been identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church, for ten years officiated as an exhorter, and long served as a class leader and Sunday School teacher. His conversion took place during family prayers, subsequent to a visit to Ohio, where he had been impressed with a feeling that it was his duty to become a worker for Christ. On his return home he had taken the Bible and read a chapter, after which he knelt in prayer, and while seeking light from above his whole being was stirred by a realization of Christ's love; he arose a converted man, and ever since he has labored to bring others to the experience which has been to him a source of uplifting joy. The cause of prohibition has had a staunch friend in him and his assistance has been given to the work. Ever since the organization of the Grand Army post at Camden he has been a prominent member, and has filled the position of Chaplain.

PIERSON, Azel.—No house within the boundaries of Birmingham Township is richer in memories than that in Section 19, which has been occupied by Azel Pierson ever since his settlement on his present farm during January of the bleak winter of 1854. Continuously since then has this now retired farmer watched and participated in the changes which have marked the march of time; has promoted with intelligence and unabating interest the agricultural, educational, political, religious and social progress of the community, and has set a standard of character and work which must be regarded as typical of the best possible achievements in the quiet of pastoral pursuits.

Born on a farm near Cedarville, Cumberland County, N. J., January 22, 1817, Mr. Pierson is a son of Daniel and Naomi (Nixon) Pierson, both natives of Cedarville and farmers by occupation. In Cedarville were educated the fourteenth children of this worthy couple, but of this number several were destined to complete their training in Illinois, to which the family journeyed from Cedarville during the spring of 1833, reaching the then small hamlet of Jacksonville on the first day of July. In Cedarville Mr. Pierson had been the classmate and friend of Newton Bateman, the latter destined to fill a large place in the educational and literary annals of Illinois, and who, for many years, was the honored President of Knox College, at Galesburg. Mr. Bateman was born in Fairfield, Essex County, N. J., in 1822, and he, with the rest of his father's family, accompanied the Pierson family in their overland journey to Jacksonville, Ill. Daniel Pierson, who by profession was a physician, engaging in milling and farming there until his removal to Augusta, Hancock County, in 1851. Here he died in 1856, and his wife died in Kansas at the home of one of her sons. Of the fourteen children but three survive, Azel; Ruth, widow of Cyrus Palmer, the latter killed by the bursting of a gun in Knoxville; and Naomi N., wife of Edward B. Tanner, of Illinois.

The change from the New Jersey home to Illinois was the only vital break in the monotony of the youth of Azel Pierson. He was studious and industrious, and learned much from the crude conditions and meager opportunities by which he was surrounded. He knew how to both make and save money, and September 8, 1841, established a home of his own by marrying Harriet Catlin, born near Hartford, Conn., and a daughter of David and Louise (Goodwin) Catlin. Mrs. Pierson came with her parents to Augusta, Ill., in July, 1837. She is the mother of seven children, five of whom died in infancy. The survivors are Elizabeth, born November 10, 1848, wife of Rev. Frank Mitchell, of Missouri, and mother of two children, Margaret and Homer; and Henry, born November 22, 1860.

For three years after his marriage Mr. Pierson continued to live in Augusta, and as before stated, in January, 1854, moved to his present farm. The place was sadly deficient in improvements, and only a portion had been cleared, so that much of the 200 acres owe their clearing and cultivation to his well directed industry. He has seen many orchards set out by the settlers outlive their usefulness and be grubbed up, has witnessed the rise of giant forest trees from insignificant saplings, and his place has upon it many kinds of ornamental, shade and fruit trees, which, but for his forethought, never had rustled their leaves in the summer wind. Constant improvement has been the watchword of his personal and working life, and in consequence he has a home that meets the requirements of taste, comfort and prosperity. Over this excellent and valuable domain the owner personally held supervision until after his eighty-second birthday, and when ninety-one years have passed over his head, he still is in possession of his faculties, admired for the splendid simplicity and normality of his life, and the high ethics which he has applied to all of his intercourse with his fellow men. For the past twelve years he has noted a failure of his eyesight, and each Monday afternoon he drives two miles to Augusta, where Mrs. Holmes, a gifted and faithful friend, reads him extracts from current literature.

For the past fifty-six years Mr. Pierson has been a member of the First Presbyterian Church, of Jacksonville, having joined the same in 1838, when the town was an infant community, with wild grass waving in the present center (now a park) of the town. He has been an elder in the church many years, and always has been one of its staunchest and most dependable financial and general supporters. His first presidential vote was cast for William Henry Harrison, and he has never swerved from the principles of the Republican party since the foundations of its political structure were laid in the State by Paul Selby and other of his influential friends and co-workers. Although never seeking or desiring office, Mr. Pierson for thirty years was a member of the local School Board, his sole object being an interest in the education of the youth of the rising generation. The shadows gathered around his peaceful life December 7, 1880, when his devoted wife joined the great silent majority, but he bravely took up the threads of life thus cruelly severed, and became again the self-sacrificing, noble, dependable and altogether companionable gentleman of the old school.

PIERSON, Henry Catlin.—On the old homestead in Section 19, Birmingham Township, which has been the possession of his honored father, Azel Pierson, since 1854, Henry Catlin Pierson was born November 22, 1860. Reared to the hard work of the farm, educated in the country schools, and at night school in Augusta, Hancock County, Mr. Pierson early in life adjusted himself to the exactions of his calling, and in mature life represents the men of breadth and understanding who are potent factors in promoting every phase and possibility of the fundamental calling of agriculture.

When Mr. Pierson had attained nineteen years of age he became the partner of his father in an extensive stock raising, feeding and selling enterprise, operating under the firm name of Pierson & Son. For many years this firm have been foremost in the breeding of Aberdeen-Angus Cattle, and average from twenty-five to fifty in their herd. In 1903 Mr. Pierson purchased the interest of his father in the stock and of his sisters in the farm, and now owns 400 acres in one body. All of this land is tillable, and it is divided into twenty-five and fifty acre pastures and fields, the stock being shifted from one field to another as occasion demands, thus affording opportunity for the undisturbed growth of new pasture. During the winter season he feeds about a hundred head of cattle and thirty head of horses, and other kinds of stock come in for a share of his care and attention. About 200 acres of his land is devoted to raising general produce, and he is an extensive buyer of produce, in fact of every variety of produce raised on the farms of Schuyler County. He is also engaged in baling straw and hay for dealers. His farm is a model of neatness and order, and an expression of the highest tenets known to modern country life.

The marriage of Virginia Decker and Mr. Pierson occurred in Augusta, Ill., October 8, 1885, Mrs. Pierson being a daughter of Eli and Estella (Leach) Decker, pioneers of this part of Illinois. To Mr. and Mrs. Pierson have been born two sons, of whom James H., born September 13, 1886, is a graduate of the Augusta high-school, class of 1906. Roland D., the younger son, is a student in the Electrical Engineering Department of the University of Illinois. Mr. Pierson has been a staunch supporter of Republican principles and issues ever since attaining his majority, and for years has been a Justice of the Peace of Schuyler County. With his wife he is a member of the Christian Church. He is a well read, progressive and substantial farmer, a promoter of genuine and constructive usefulness, and an upholder of the best social, moral and agricultural ideals known to the twentieth century.

POLLOCK, Joseph Walker, a very worthy and creditable representative of the agricultural element of Schuyler County, Ill., is successfully pursuing his wonted occupation in Section 5, Littleton Township, the same locality in which he was born November 25, 1862. Mr. Pollock is a son of William and Sarah Margaret (Walker) Pollock, natives of Indiana and Ohio, respectively. William Pollock was brought by his parents to Schuyler County when a little boy, in 1832, and his father and mother died within three months after the arrival of the family. Being thus left without parental care at a very tender age, he was brought up by a farmer named Campbell, living in Scotland Township, McDonough County, Ill., with whom he remained until he was 21 years old. At that period he began work as a farm hand in the employ of Darius Runkle, one of the most extensive landholders in Central Illinois. In course of time he bought, from Samuel Dodds, who was very prominent among the early settlers, 80 acres of unimproved land in Section 5, Littleton Township. This he improved, putting up all the necessary buildings, and conducting farming operations thereon until 1896. In that year he abandoned active pursuits, and moved to Macomb, McDonough County, where he spent his last years in retirement, dying February 2, 1899, at the age of seventy-four years. His widow is still living in Macomb, making her home with her daughter, Mrs. Messmore. They had five sons and six daughters, of whom Joseph W. is the eighth in order of birth. Four of the sons and two daughters now survive, namely: Cyuthia (Mrs. A. A. Messmore), of Macomb, Ill.; William A., a resident of Fandon, Ill.; Robert A., who follows farming in Scotland Township, McDonough County; Joseph W., to whom this personal record pertains; Blanche, who is the wife of Nathaniel Buck, and resides at New London, Ia.; and Arthur D., who is engaged in the practice of medicine in Rushville, Schuyler County. William Pollock was a man of upright character, enjoying the respect and confidence of all who knew him, and his bereaved widow is the object of the warmest regard in her declining years.

Joseph W. Pollock was reared to farm life, and in early youth, received his education in the Flat-Iron district school, in the vicinity of the parental home. After his marriage, he rented 80 acres of his father's land in Section 4, Littleton Township, which he afterwards bought. He also purchased from his father, in 1898, 80 acres in Section 5, in the same township, on which the latter had put up all the buildings and completed the improvements. Mr. Pollock has thoroughly tiled the farm, and rebuilt the barn and out-buildings. His property is in excellent condition, and all implements are kept in perfect order, and in their proper places, when not in use. He is a very diligent and systematic farmer, and his labors have been attended with profitable results.

Mr. Pollock was married February 14, 1884, to Emma Bell Merriweather, who was born in the neighborhood of Doddsville, McDonough County, Ill., July 18, 1862. Mrs. Pollock, a woman of most amiable traits of character, is a daughter of George and Mary Ellen (Huff) Merriweather, her father being a native of Indiana, and her mother, of Illinois, born in Fulton County. The paternal grandparents, James and Mollie (Bell) Merriweather, were natives of Louisville, Ky., and those on the maternal side were born in Fulton County, Ill., namely: Abijah and Mary (McClaren) Huff. Three children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Pollock, as follows: Roland C., born November 18, 1884; Florence Mildred, born September 2, 1886; and William Frederiek, born October 15, 1891. The eldest, Roland C., resides on Grandfather Merriweather's farm in Industry Township, McDonough County. He was married on June 20, 1907, to Florence Rexroat, a daughter of T. C. Rexroat, of Bethel Township, Schuyler County. Florence M. and William F. are at home with their parents.

In politics, Mr. Pollock has always been identified with the Republican party, although never taking an active part in political contests, and being without the slightest desire for public office. His interest in civic affairs is, however, intelligent and earnest.

PRATT, Harry, the present Deputy Sheriff of Schuyler County, Ill., is a young man of character and many sided worth, and one whose private as well as official life will stand the test of the closest scrutiny. He is a product of the farming contingent of this part of the State, and was born in Huntsville Township, Schuyler County, February 11, 1874. In his youth Mr. Pratt had the advantage of a pleasant home atmosphere, and of parental appreciation and encouragement when his work was well done. His father was Leonard J. Pratt, son of Leonard Pratt, both of Ohio, and the former of whom was born April 29, 1843. Leonard J. Pratt was reared on a farm and educated in the subscription schools, and when secession reared its gory head and brought about the calamity of the Civil War, he enlisted in Company K, Second Regiment Ohio Heavy Artillery, one of the first military organizations to depart for the conflict from the State of Ohio. The "Second" early invaded Kentucky and did valiant work at Fort Donelson and other scenes of carnage and desolation, and its members included none more brave than the father of the present county deputy sheriff. His term expired, he returned to his home in Ohio, but soon after came to Huntsville, Schuyler County, where, on June 28, 1868, he was united in marriage to Celilia Angelica Sanford. Of this union there were fourteen children, four of whom died in infancy. Those living are as follows: Effie, Harry, Elsie, Clara, Clinton, Cleveland, Nina, Pearl, Dwight and Iva. Mrs. Pratt died in 1892, at the age of thirty-nine years, and the second wife of Mr. Pratt was Mrs. Iverson, daughter of Dr. A. J. Mead. Leonard J. Pratt was a kind husband and father, and in his business and social relations, was the soul of honor, courtesy and consideration.

The entire life of Harry Pratt has been spent in the county in which he was born, and where he was educated in the public schools. His wage earning career began at the age of seventeen years, when he hired out by the month, on a farm. The yearning for a home of his own was one of the most persistent of his early inclinations, and December 24, 1899, he was united in matrimony to Jessie Claude Pierce, also a native of Huntsville Township, and daughter of Millard Fillmore Pierce, and Blanch (McKee) Pierce. The Pierce family is of early southern connection, and Mr. Pierce, son of William Pierce, is still a resident of Huntsville, he having come from the home of his forefathers in North Carolina, in early manhood. He is a prosperous and honored man, and was formerly identified with the mercantile upbuilding of Huntsville Township.

From 1900 until 1904 Mr. Pratt worked on a farm in Huntsville Township, and during the latter year was employed as a clerk in a general store in the village of Huntsville. In the meantime he had been active in Democratic politics, wielded a considerable influence in the local deliberations of his party, and in 1906 he was chosen Deputy Sheriff of Schuyler County, a position which he has since maintained with distinct credit. Mr. and Mrs. Pratt have two children, of whom Celilia Blanche was born August 8, 1901; and Corinne Almeda, October 27, 1906. Mr. and Mrs. Pratt are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Huntsville, but since locating in Rushville in 1906, attend the church of that denomination in the latter city. Mr. Pratt is socially inclined, and is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Huntsville, and the Modern Woodmen of America, of Rushville. He has achieved fair financial success, and is known as one of the county's capable, promising and thoroughly dependable business men and politicians.

PURDY, Mrs. Elizabeth.—Seventy years and more have come and gone since Mrs. Purdy first came to Schuyler County, for it was in 1837 that she arrived in what is now Frederick Township. Though only nine years of age, already had her childish eyes beheld much of the country and already had the responsibilities of life fallen upon her tender form. The children of the pioneers had no care-free existence. Theirs it was to aid the older people in planting a home in the primeval wilderness, and her recollections of childhood bring back memories of laborious tasks; yet those were happy years and she recalls them now with unchanging delight. Born in West Virginia February 3, 1828, she was a daughter of Alexander and Achsah (Gond) Furbree, also natives of that State. The family migrated to Illinois in 1835 and took up land near Beardstown, Cass County, but two years later came to Schuyler County, where she grew to womanhood. The first home of the family was a claim comprising the far mow owned by Charles K. Strong. On that homestead Mrs. Furbree died in 1844. Six years later the father traveled overland to California and began to prospect and mine, but ere success had rewarded his efforts he died in the West in 1856. Of his six children only two are now living, namely: Elizabeth (Mrs. Purdy) and Evaline, widow of Joseph Beals and a resident of Los Angeles, Cal.

While still a young girl, Elizabeth Furbree became the wife of John G. Quinn, and two children were born of their union, namely: Thomas D., now living at North Yakima, Wash.; and Evengiston, a rancher and merchant in Wyoming. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Quinn settled on a farm in Frederick Township and began to improve the same. When gold was discovered in California Mr. Quinn became interested in the West and decided to accompany his father-in-law to the mines. The journey was made without disaster. Shortly after his arrival in California and after purchasing a claim, he was taken ill and soon died. Far from wife and children, his body was laid to rest by his father-in-law.

The second marriage of the subject of this sketch took place in 1852, when she was united with Joseph M. Purdy, who was born in Lebanon, Ky., and was one of a family of twenty-three children, all but one of whom attained years of maturity. Three of the sons and three daughters came to Illinois; the others becoming scattered in various parts of the United States. The Purdy family was founded in the United States by three brothers from Ireland, one of whom settled in Kentucky, another in New York and the third in Ohio. From the time of his settlement in Schuyler County in 1831 until his death in 1878, Mr. Purdy was actively identified with its agricultural development and aided in the transformation of its wild lands into fertile farms. Public enterprises received his sympathetic co-operation. The cause of education had in him a firm friend. Religious movements benefited by his assistance. As a farmer he was especially interested in the development of our lands. For a time he cultivated the farm now occupied by Mrs. Dunlap, but in 1861 he moved to the place still owned and occupied by his widow.

The following-named children comprised the family of Mr. and Mrs. Purdy: Anna, wife of Dr. S. D. Bader, of Peabody, Ind.; Emma, deceased, was the wife of R. Jordan, of Alma, Ore.; Maggie, (Mrs. George Doane), of Los Angeles, Cal.; Bettie, who married Grant Hendricks and lives in Salina, Kan.; Henry, of Ballard, Wash.; Joseph M., who was born March 21, 1866, and is living on the old homestead; and Eva, who remains at home and cares for her mother, tenderly ministering to her comfort in her age, and Millard, who is deceased.

Among her neighbors Grandma Purdy (for it is by this name she is affectionately known) is loved and honored. Many an interesting hour may be passed in her society as she narrates events of the early days. Retaining an excellent memory of the happenings of pioneer times, she loves to recount to younger generations incidents familiar to her youth. The winters were very severe and the settlers suffered greatly from the extreme cold, especially because their cabins did not afford sufficient protection from wind and weather. Fires were started by the aid of a flint. In the evenings the neighbors would gather in and sit by the large fireplace where, after enjoying one of Grandma Purdy's fine suppers, they would crack nuts and tell stories. She retains her love for the old-fashioned fireplaces and believes that, for comfort and beauty, they cannot be surpassed by the modern methods of heating. The telephone has never interested her, for she desires to see the face of the person with whom she is conversing; and in addition she thinks that the old spirit of neighborliness that was evinced in frequent visits has been lost through the introduction of the 'phone. Only two of her old neighbors are now left. The others have been called to their eternal rest, but the near-by presence of devoted children and frequent letters from those far away, prevent her from becoming lonely and enable her in her age to remain happy and contented. For many years she has been a member of the Christian Church and her faith in a reunion with loved ones gone before, cheers the evening of her days.

RAPER, William G., one of the best known and most highly respected farmers of Littleton Township, Schuyler County, Ill., where his life has kept pace with the advancing stages of the county's development from the early days of its settlement, was born in Guilford County, N. C., December 28, 1829. He is a son of Solomon and Asenath (Miller) Raper, natives of that State. His grandfather, William Raper, was born in Wales. Solomon Raper, who followed farming in North Carolina, moved with his family to Illinois in 1844, making the journey across the country by team, and settling in Buena Vista Township, Schuyler County. After living there on rented land for several years, he located in Littleton Township, where he spent the remainder of his days, dying in 1855. His widow survived him for many years, passing away February 18, 1888, while making her home with the subject of this sketch, at the age of seventy-nine years. William G. Raper received his early education partly in the common schools of Guilford County, N. C.; and partly in those of Buena Vista Township, Schuyler County, which he attended for two terms. He lived at home until he was twenty-one years old, and then rented a farm in Littleton Township, on which he remained twelve years. At the end of this period, he bought 80 acres of land in Section 14, of the same township, 20 acres of which were cleared and contained a log cabin. After clearing the rest of the place, he put up buildings and made all necessary improvements. Fifteen years later, he added 40 acres to the original purchase, and subsequently acquired some timber land, now used for pasture. On June 12, 1907, he bought 80 acres of prairie land, all in the same section. He has about 120 acres under cultivation, and besides general farming, is engaged in raising cattle and hogs.

On February 9, 1893, Mr. Raper was joined in matrimony with Amelia Hogger, who was born in Switzerland, March 30, 1875, and is a daughter of Jacob and Marie (Volke) Hogger, natives of that country, the whole of whose lives was spent there. Mrs. Raper came to Littleton, Ill., in 1892. Four children were the offspring of this marriage, as follows: Jennie Edith, born February 10, 1894; William Henry, born January 19, 1895; Julia Esther, born October 20, 1899, deceased in infancy; and Helen Irene, born April 14, 1902.

In politics, Mr. Raper is an adherent of the Democratic party, and has held the office of Road Commissioner of Littleton Township. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., and is also a member of the Knights Templar of Rushville. His religious connection is with the Baptist Church. He commands the respect and confidence of all classes in the community.

REBMAN, Adam, an honored pioneer of Frederick Township, Schuyler County, Ill., where he has a most attractive home on Section 19, and is the owner of 221 acres of very desirable land, is one of the strong characters in connection with the progress and development of this portion of the county. Mr. Rebman was born in the vicinity of Albany, N. Y., September 16, 1833, and is a son of John and Elizabeth (Hoffman) Rebman. John Rebman was a native of what was French territory at the time of his birth, in 1803, but since the Franco-Prussian War, has become a portion of the German Empire. When he was about 19 years of age he left the scenes of his youth, in order to avoid serving in the army, under the Prussian draft, and crossing the Atlantic alone, located in New York State, near the city of Albany. There about the year 1830, he was married to Margarette Dorothy Hoffman. He remained in that locality until 1836, and then started with his family for the West, intending to make his home in Chicago. The boat on which he had taken passage was destroyed by fire, however, and all his belongings were consumed. Being a cooper by trade, and hearing of the heavy timber in parts of Central Illinois, he decided that Schuyler County would be a good place for him to establish himself in work, and suiting the action to the decision, settled in the village of Frederick. He was successful in his labors as a cooper, and finally bought a farm near Frederick. John Rebman was a very honest and industrious man, and through his meritorious qualities, became one of the most substantial and highly respected citizens of his locality. He died in 1881, at the age of 78 years, his good wife having passed away in 1868. They were the parents of sixteen children, five of whom died in infancy.

Those who grew to years of maturity are as follows: Andrew, who was born in New York State, and died at the age of seventy years; Adam; Philip, who lives in St. Louis, Mo.; John, who died when about forty-two years old, leaving a family; George F., who is engaged in farming in Rushville Township; Frank, a dairyman, of Frederick, Ill.; Maurice, deceased; Rose, wife of Sidney Geer, a farmer at Atlanta, Neb.; Mary, who married Abraham Black, a soldier in the Civil War, now living at Beardstown, Ill.; Stephen, who died at the age of fifty years; and Della, wife of Frank Geer, a farmer in Brown-ing Township, Schuyler County.

Adam Rebman was brought to Schuyler County, Ill., by his parents when he was three years old. In early youth he recited his lessons to the subscription schoolmaster in the little log schoolhouse built on the hill where the Darnell farm lay. He has still a lively recollection of its large fireplace and slab benches, with desks built by sticks being put into holes bored in the logs. His first teacher was David Berry, whom he well remembers. In early manhood Mr. Rebman learned the trade of a cooper and carpenter in his father's shop on the farm, and remained on the home place until the time of his marriage. After this event, he went with his brother to Liverpool, Fulton County, Ill., where he worked at the cooper's trade. In 1862, he bought a tract of 160 acres in Section 20, Frederick Township, where his son, Frank, now lives. The land was covered with a second growth of heavy timber. Mr. Rebman cleared it, making the wood into barrels and ties, which he sold, burning the pine log slabs, and eventually having a well improved farm. This he disposed of in 1877, purchasing 180 acres of fairly well cleared land in Section 19, in the same township, which he has since developed into one of the most valuable farms in the locality, making a beautiful and attractive home. For seventy-one years, Mr. Rebman has been a resident of Frederick Township, and has done his full share in promoting its development. He has confronted and endured all the hardships and privations of pioneer life, and kept pace with the growth of the region, from a barren wild, to a scene of civilization and plenty. His first harvesting in this locality was done with the cradle and sickle, and his hay was cut with the old fashioned scythe. Telephones and electric lights were then a mere dream, if they entered the mind of the most visionary at all. Every kind of machine or implement in use for farming was of the antique style, and tallow dips and molded candles furnished the only artificial light. Now, his farm is equipped with all kinds of up-to-date machinery for the cutting and lifting of hay, and the harvesting of grain.

On May 30, 1861, Mr. Rebman was united in marriage with Lavina Hill, who was born in England, and is a daughter of William Hill, a native of that country. William Hill came from England in the fore part of the last century, locating first in Brownsville, Tex., and afterwards in Galveston, in that State, where his last days were spent. His daughter, Lavina, came to Frederick, Ill., at an early day, to visit friends. But one member of her family, Mrs. Coates, is located in this part of the country. During this visit Mr. Rebman formed the acquaintance that resulted in his marriage. This union was the source of sixteen children, of whom five died in infancy, and eleven are still living. All were born in Frederick Township, and the names of those surviving are as follows: William, a farmer and miner in the vicinity of Rushville, Ill.; Jessie, wife of Leander Settles, a biographical record of whose life appears elsewhere in this volume; John, who is engaged in farming in Frederick Township; Josephine, wife of Otis Leytes, who follows the same occupation in Rushville Township; Addie, who married Warren Spillers, a farmer, of Frederick Township; Leora (Mrs. Leander Allen), a resident of Pleasantview, Schuyler County; Oscar F. and Frank, twins—both of whom are farming in Frederick Township, the latter being on the old home farm; Annie, who is with her parents; Lucy, who became the wife of Charles Nell, a farmer, of Browning Township, Schuyler County; and Dora, who is at home.

In politics, Adam Rebman is identified with the Democratic party, and has creditably filled various local offices, never, however, entertaining any ambition for public honors. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the M. W. A. He and his excellent wife are consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and both are sincerely respected by all classes in the community.

REBMAN, Benjamin F.—The family represented by this extensive farmer and dairyman of Schuyler County, Ill., originated in Germany and was founded in the United States by John Rebman, born February 17, 1803, and an immigrant to the new world in 1830. Soon afterward he began to follow the cooper's trade at Frederick, Schuyler County, and later settled at Pleasantview, in the same county, where his son, Benjamin F., was born January 12, 1848. Four years after the birth of the son the family moved to a farm on Section 3, Frederick Township, where the boy passed the years of youth and was given such advantages as the neighboring school afforded. Being of an observing nature, he learned more by self-culture than from textbooks and is now a man of broad information. The family had limited means and it was necessary for him to take up the struggle for a livelihood at an early age. Grasping the work nearest at hand, he became a farm laborer, and in that capacity, continued for a considerable period, meanwhile saving his earnings with a view to future investment.

While employed as an assistant to Davis Curry on the latter's farm, Mr. Rebman proved so capable and efficient that, when Mr. Curry felt himself to be fatally ill, he requested that his assistant be retained after his death to superintend the work of the estate. This was done, and after the death of Mr. Curry, which occurred May 14, 1873, the farm was operated by Mr. Rebman. On January 1, 1879, he was united in marriage with the widow of Davis Curry, and they remained at the old place for ten years, after which Mr. Rebman bought thirty acres of land, and embarked in the dairy business. By degrees he has added to his original possessions until he now owns 160 acres adjoining Frederick, and 220 acres also north of that village, making 380 acres in all. His dairy barn is provided with a cement floor and furnished with every modern equipment, while all the appliances for the care of the milk show a careful regard for sanitary conditions. Twenty-five head of cows are kept in the dairy, and the products of that department of the work are by no means insignificant.

The union of Mr. and Mrs. Rebman was blessed with three children. The eldest was born October 17, 1881, and died April 29, 1882. The second, Gail, was born July 28, 1883, and has been given superior advantages, having attended the Blackburn University, spent one year at Eureka College and graduated from the Illinois State University, afterwards accepting a position in the Colfax High School as Teacher of English and Medieval History. The youngest child, Herman, born November 21, 1884, was likewise given good advantages, and is now with his parents on the farm. Mrs. Rebman is an active worker in the Christian Church, and Mr. Rebman is in hearty sympathy with the same, although not a member. It was largely through his suggestion and assistance that the house of worship for that congregation was erected in Frederick. In habits he is temperate. Liquors he has abstained from, tobacco he has never used, and tea and coffee form no part of his diet. Both by example and by precept he has given his influence to the cause of prohibition, and has been an opponent of the saloons. In politics, he has been a Republican ever since attaining his majority. For many years he served as School Trustee, and always has been interested in the cause of general education. In fraternal relations he is a Royal Arch Mason and a member of the Modern Woodmen of America.

REEVE, Simon A.—The life of Simon A. Reeve has spanned the distance between the far frontier and the twentieth century of Schuyler County. Graven upon his memory, and upon that of the faithful wife who with him occupies a beautiful home in Rushville, Ill., are incidents which never again can enliven the experience of mankind because the conditions governing them have been swept beyond human ken by the forces of civilization. Mr. Reeve himself has done much to bring about the wonderful changes which have taken place since the establishment of his family here in 1829, and perhaps his written observations of the same would constitute as true and interesting a narrative as any which have been penned for the delectation and enlightenment of the present generation.

In the peace of his later days Mr. Reeve delights to recall the youth of a region which now boasts unexampled progress and prosperity. He himself was but a year old when he came here with his parents in 1829 from Springfield, Ill., where he was born December 28, 1828. His father, John A. Reeve, who was a native of New York, and who came to Illinois with his parents about 1820, continued to live in Springfield until coming to Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County, in 1829. The Indians at that time were plentiful, and regarded the paleface as an unwarranted intruder. Game abounded on every hand, and the forests as yet were unaccustomed to the noise of modern firearms. Indian trails were the only thoroughfares, and the wigwam the prevailing style of architecture. Something of the dread silence of the prairies must have appalled this intrepid invader of the frontier, for he gave a man of the name of Gordon fifty acres of land if he would live on it and thus become his neighbor. This same land is now valued at $125 an acre, a fact which indicates emphatically the advance made during the past three score odd years.

Simon A. Reeve attended school during the leisure of the winter months, and in summer worked in the harvest fields. The schoolhouse had a puncheon floor, a wooden latch on the door, and a big fireplace to consume logs. The children drank from a gourd, and in many instances walked miles over dreary stretches of wind swept road, twice a day. Simon remained on the home place until his marriage, January 12, 1854, to Jane Orr, a native of County Fermanagh, Ireland, and born October 14, 1833. Mrs. Reeve is a daughter of Joseph and Mary Ann (Burnside) Orr, and came with her parents to America in a sailing vessel in November, 1839, settling in Bainbridge Township. Mr. and Mrs. Reeve went to housekeeping in Bainbridge Township in a log house 18 by 20 feet in dimensions, and part of this original home is still standing on the old place, a witness to the courage and early efforts of the pioneer occupants. Eighty acres of the farm was covered with heavy timber, which, owing to the absence of a paying market, was consumed for fuel. Both of the young people were well prepared for their life of hardship and deprivation, and both possessed the industry which moves mountains and raises those who possess it to places of comfort and honor. Mrs. Reeve had learned the art of weaving, and all of the clothing of the household was made by her, the crude wool being washed, colored, woven and made into garments by her patient hands. This loyal mother still has blankets and coverlets created by her in the days of long ago, and when her sons grew to maturity and married she gave each of them a blanket for a keepsake. The log house was a popular one in the neighborhood, the center of much hospitality and enjoyment, and the people got much out of life with their crude accessories and opportunities. A common custom was the hitching up of ox teams and attending church in a body, or assembling at the homes to eat and drink and make merry before the blazing logs of the fireplace. A great time was had at the erection of the Reeve barn about 1869, the neighbors coming from afar, and working with might and main to complete the large structure.

Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Reeve, of whom Simon and Isadore died in infancy. William H. now owns part of the old homestead, and Pulaski is a retired farmer, of Rushville. To the first eighty acres more was added as success came the way of the owners, Mr. Reeve finally having 280 acres which he continued to occupy and manage until erecting his present beautiful modern home in Rushville in 1905. Taken as a whole, the lives of this worthy couple have been useful and fortunate ones, and in the twilight of their existence they have much to be grateful for. Their sons are capable, honored Christian gentlemen, reflecting the training with which their youth was so richly blessed, and friends have risen up who delight in an association of great benefit to all concerned. No name stands for greater purity of character or for safe and practical ideals of living, in the annals of Schuyler County.

REEVE, William H.—The opinion has often been expressed that America is too big to love; that natives of such countries as Switzerland, Holland or England may have an affection for the very soil of the fatherland, but that an American can never be imbued with such a love. Such critics need not even go to the old homesteads of the Eastern and Southern States to be disabused of such an idea, for right here in the long-settled agricultural communities of Illinois, they will find many families who are still living where their fathers located more than half a century ago, and who have a feeling almost of devotion toward every familiar tree and stream and gently rolling fields, recalling some scene of the passing years. A signal illustration of this deep love for the old home place among Americans is furnished in the life of William H. Reeve, a leading farmer and large land owner of Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County. Born in the township named, on the farm which he now occupies, on October 17, 1854, he is the son of Simon A. Reeve, whose first home when he came to Schuyler County, was the little tumble-down of a log cabin, which may still be seen from the comfortable residence of William H., and which is tenderly preserved by him as the place of his birth and the center of his boyhood and youth. The dilapidated home cabin has also been photographed and a handsome framed picture hangs upon the walls of the present family residence. It was here he lived until his eighteenth birthday, when the paternal family moved into a beautiful dwelling erected on the farm, not far away.

William H. Reeve remained upon the home farm with his parents until his marriage to Harriet E. Ackley, March 31, 1879. His wife was born in Adams County, Ill., in January, 1852, the daughter of Nathan and Pauline (Spangler) Ackley, natives, respectively, of New York and Indiana, who settled in Huntsville Township, Schuyler County, at an early day.

After his marriage, Mr. Reeve and his father entered into a partnership in their agricultural operations. The latter purchased an eighty-acre timber tract, and as the son was very skillful in grubbing stumps, his part of the clearing was readily assigned. Of that tract sixty acres was cleared. Father and son operated together until January, 1904, when the former retired from active work to a beautiful home in the city of Rushville, the county seat, where he and his faithful wife are surrounded by steadfast friends, and live amid the comforts and peace springing from industrious and well-spent years.

William H. Reeve is acknowledged to be one of the best grain farmers and live-stock men in the county, conducting his extensive operations on a magnificent tract of 307 acres in one body, lying in Section 15, Bainbridge Township. He gives special attention to the raising of wheat and clover, Gold Dust being the variety of that grain which is his particular pride, and in the cultivation of which he has met with remarkable success. During the past year he had 130 acres devoted to wheat alone. He also keeps upon the farm the best grade of live stock, his sleek, well-fed animals, the methodical appearance of his fields and the bright, substantial condition of his buildings, revealing the hand and mind of the master agriculturist. Decided skill as a tiller of the soil, high ability as a manager and uncompromising integrity in his dealings, have inspired a general and a firm confidence which has never been shaken.

As he looks back over the half a century, and more, since he first placed his feet on the soil which he still treads, during which time many of his boyhood friends have gone to other places and some to their long rest, he cannot but be thankful that he has been permitted to take such an active part in the many great changes which have taken place. He has lived to see the price of land in Schuyler County rise from $25 to $125 an acre, and to witness the rise of villages and cities from the forest and the raw prairie. Schools and churches have sprung into life and the township government has been organized and extended—in all of which progress Mr. Reeve has taken the part of a good and enterprising citizen.

Besides his large farming and landed interests, Mr. Reeve is identified with the city of Rushville, being the owner of a business house on the west side of the square, and a splendid residence. In religion he is a Methodist, and in politics, a Democrat, and altogether a splendid type of the American farmer and American citizen, firmly attached to his church, his party, his country and his home.

RENO, Benjamin F.—On the farm he now occupies in Section 22, Browning Township, Schuyler County, Ill., Benjamin F. Reno was born April 22, 1856. Previously, his parents, Jonathan and Louisa (Thornton) Reno, had made for themselves substantial place in the history of the township, having settled here in 1825, when the locality offered small encouragement to the people who sought immediate recognition of their industry and worth. Jonathan Reno long since joined the silent majority, but a distinct and unfailing echo of the days of the frontier is found in the wife who survives him, and who, with the snows of ninety-five years in her hair, and the kindness and happiness of one who has lived well and faithfully in her heart, is the joy of the household of her son, Benjamin F. It will be seen that the township has profited by the association of this family for eighty-three years, and it would be difficult to estimate the good and influence that have resulted therefrom. The wife of the early settler has a remarkably active mind, and her associates delight in her stories of the log cabin and tallow dip days, and especially of the winter of 1830, known as the winter of the deep snow. Almost incredible seem the experiences of the people who were making that early history, and the discouragements they encountered and obstacles they overcame, pronounce them people of more than ordinary purpose and determination. Mrs. Reno recalls the wigwam of the Indians, and her many experiences with them, although for the most part they at that time had moved to other hunting grounds, returning, however, occasionally, to the former place of their abode.

Benjamin F. Reno came upon the scene when many comforts and advantages had been introduced into the lives of the settlers, but of necessity his educational chances were limited, and confined to the subscription schools and study around the hearth when the day's tasks were completed. When his father arrived at the age where leisure was more welcome than labor, the son renewed his ardor and assumed additional responsibility, and October 9, 1887, was united in marriage to Emma Workman, who was born in Hickory Township, Schuyler County, July 5, 1869, a daughter of Joseph Workman, a native of Ohio, and pioneer of Schuyler County. Mrs. Workman, who now lives in Browning Township, was born in Georgia, and came early to this Western Illinois. To Mr. and Mrs. Reno have been born four children, two of whom died in infancy. Of those living, Guy is a graduate of the Rushville Normal, Class of 1906, and of the business department of the same institution, Class of 1907; and Ellsworth is a student in the district schools. Out of the kindness of their hearts Mr. and Mrs. Reno have given a home, since he was a year and a half old, to John Stambaugh, who now is twenty years old, a graduate of the Rushville Normal, and who always signs himself John Reno. He is now in the mail service.

Mr. Reno is the fortunate possessor of 105 acres of land which he devotes to stock and general produce. He is one of the thrifty and successful farmers of the township, and sustains well the reputation established by his father when Schuyler County was an unhindered wilderness. Politically, he is a Democrat, and fraternally, is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

RENO, Hon. William C.—The founder of the Reno family in Illinois was Jonathan, who as early as 1825 brought his wife and children to Schuyler County and entered land in Frederick Township near what is known as Reno Lake. From there in 1827 he removed to Rushville Township and entered land on Section 16, later transferring his home to McDonough County, and eventually going to the vicinity of Springfield, Mo., where he died. After his death his widow returned to Illinois and remained in Schuyler County until her death. Their son, Jonathan, Jr., was born in East Tennessee, and about 1834 married Eliza Thornton, a native of the same State. Their marriage was solemnized in Browning Township, where they made their home during much of their lives. As a farmer he was industrious and persevering. For a time he also operated a sawmill. At the time of the construction of the Wabash Railroad he had a contract to furnish ties and other material for building; this he rafted down the Illinois as far as Naples, where it was put into use. With the exception of two years spent in Iowa he continued to reside in Browning Township until his death in 1884, a part of his better years being spent on the farm now occupied by Benjamin F., his youngest son. Politically, he was stanch in his allegiance to the Democratic party. His widow has reached the venerable age of ninety-five years, and makes her home with her son, B. F., at the old homestead. Notwithstanding her great age, she retains possession of her faculties to a large degree.

In the family of Jonathan Reno, Jr., there are five sons and two daughters now living, namely:

William C., who was born in Browning Township, Schuyler County, September 9, 1838; Jasper, a resident of Sedalia, Mo.; Charles, of Astoria, Ill.; Andrew J., a substantial farmer of Warren County, Ill.; Benjamin F., who remains at the old homestead; Rebecca, widow of I. B. Sipher; and Matilda, who married W. J. Bates and resides at Browning, Schuyler County. Three daughters died in infancy and one passed away after her marriage. During the boyhood years of William C. Reno, he helped on the home farm and attended the neighborhood schools. Children in that period had few advantages. The schoolhouse where he was a pupil was constructed of logs, with a floor of puncheons and with slabs for benches. Text-books were few and of inferior quality. However, he was a diligent student and made the most of every opportunity, studying with the utmost diligence every book that came within his reach. Thus he gained the foundation of his present broad fund of information.

At the time of the excitement caused by the discovery of gold in the Pike's Peak region, in 1859, Mr. Reno started for that region in company with others, making the journey with wagon and oxen. On his arrival he found that only men with capital could work advantageously in prospecting and mining, so he soon returned, content to settle down to the more quiet life of a farmer. October 18, 1861, he was united in marriage with Rebecca A. Wallace, who was born and reared in Browning Township. The young couple began housekeeping on a rented farm, but in 1866, they removed to Browning, where Mr. Reno had charge of a warehouse on the river. Soon he returned to the farm, but in 1876 returned to Browning where he has since made his home. In the public life of his township he has been a leader and, politically, has been a prominent Democrat, active in local party work. For ten years he officiated as township treasurer. For fourteen years he served as supervisor and, during four years of that time he was honored with the position of chairman of the board. In 1872 he was elected Justice of the Peace, which position he has filled ever since.

A further honor came to him in 1880, when he was selected to represent the Fulton and Schuyler Senatorial District, in the Illinois Legislature, where, during his term of service, he was found a faithful representative of his constituents and a talented acquisition to the Legislature.

Sorrow came into the family circle when the wife and mother was called from earth April 11, 1893, leaving to her husband and children the memory of a self-sacrificing life and a noble Christian character. Eight children were born of the marriage, one of whom died in infancy. Samuel F., the eldest son, is engaged in the real-estate and loan business at Pueblo, Colo.; Selina and Jemima make their home with their father; Mark M. holds the position of Division railroad passenger agent, with headquarters at Burlington, Ja.; Minnie M. married Amos Curry and at her death left three children—Marie, Ada and Fred; Jay is manager of a drygoods store in Macomb, Ill., and Fred, the youngest of the family, resides in Lincoln, Neb., holding the responsible position of chief of the baggage and express department of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, west of the Missouri River. The sons have risen to prominence in their various occupations and, by their success, have added prestige to an honored family name. Fraternally, Mr. Reno is identified with Astoria Lodge No. 100, A. F. & A. M., of which he became a member in 1868. Since 1864 he has been associated with Browning Lodge No. 309, I. O. O. F. Through a long life he has won and retained the confidence of his fellowmen. Honorable in business relations, alert in promotion of the welfare of the people, patriotic in devotion to county and commonwealth, keen in judgment and progressive in thought, he furnishes a type of the men who have brought Schuyler County to its present degree of prosperity and prominence.

RIDINGS, Nelson McNaire.—The success of Nelson McNaire Ridings is a logical conclusion of his inheritance and environment. For many generations his people have tilled the soil, and perfected farms which ever have represented the best thus far achieved in agricultural science. Mr. Ridings himself has proved no exception to the family precedent, but in Section 9, Camden Township, operated a property the equipment and fertility of which is not surpassed anywhere in Schuyler County. Born in Hancock County, Ill., December 2, 1849, he is a son of James E. and grandson of William Ridings, both natives of Tennessee, and early settlers of Hancock County. Some time later the family moved to Woodstock Township, Schuyler County, from the vicinity of Pulaski, Hancock County, locating near the home of Robert Brown, where the last days of William Ridings were spent in comparative retirement. He had seven children, of whom William McNaire and Mrs. Jane Skinnett are living, the latter being a native of Joplin, Missouri. Three of his sons, Mack, David and Washington, served four years each in the Civil War, one in a Missouri regiment, another in the One Hundred and Sixteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and the third in the One Hundred and Eleventh Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry. In Hancock County, Ill., James E. Ridings married Elizabeth F. Bennett, a native of Ohio, and daughter of an Ohio farmer. Mrs. Ridings came to Schuyler County with her parents and her uncle, Joseph Newberry, from Ohio, settling in Bainbridge Township, where Newberry Postoffice was named for the uncle. James Ridings was a blacksmith by trade, and this he followed after his marriage in 1846 in the village of Rushville. He later lived in Bloomington for a few years, then moved to Missouri, and after the death of his father, in 1861, returned to the old home farm in Woodstock Township, which he took charge of and lived upon until his death, November 7, 1903. Like his father before him he was the parent of seven children, of whom Lorain died in infancy; Nelson McNaire is a farmer in Schuyler County; Flora is the wife of James Greene, a farmer in Iowa; Eliza (deceased) was the wife of Jacob Harmon, Jr., of the vicinity of Rushville; Charles is a farmer of Walnut Grove Township, McDonough County, Ill.; Abbie is the wife of Eugene Betrauch, of Iowa; and Arthur lives on a farm near Rushville.

Through a close application to study during his leisure hours Nelson McNaire Ridings acquired a much better education than does the average farm-reared youth, who depends solely upon the instruction of the local schools. The hardest kind of work claimed his very early years, and when but ten he drove a team that hauled pork to Beardstown, where his uncle, David Ridings, would help him unload. During several winters he devoted his energies to teaming, and the summers were spent in the harvest field, the falls being spent in driving the horses for the old horse-power threshing machine. His father worked for several winters in the packing department of Ray & Little, and the son aided him with this work until his twenty-first year, when he began farming on land he had rented from his father. January 14, 1872, he was united in marriage to Emma Z. De Counter, born February 28, 1853, a daughter of Samuel De Counter, mention of whom may be found elsewhere in this work. To Mr. and Mrs. Ridings have been born the following children: Laura Isabell, born December 19, 1872, wife of Walter Warrington, a farmer of Camden Township, and mother of a daughter, Lena; James Samuel, born November 10, 1874, married to Lenora Head; Katie E., born December 21, 1876, deceased wife of Louis French, and mother of Altie and Jessie, the latter of whom died at the age of three years; Daisy, born December 4, 1878, deceased wife of Lee Myers, a farmer of Huntsville Township; Clifford M., born December 2, 1881, living at home with his parents; Logan J., born April 9, 1887; Raleigh, born February 9, 1889; and Guy, born November 18, 1893. Logan Ridings studied law at Des Moines, Ia., graduating in 1908; and Clifford is a graduate of the Rushville Normal and Business College, Class of 1902.

After living on rented farms for several years Mr. Ridings in 1877 bought eighty acres in Camden Township, which remained his home for twenty-six years. He was successful at general farming and stock-raising, and in 1903 moved to the farm owned by Samuel De Counter, which consists of 300 acres in Section 9, Camden Township. He at present is extensively engaged in the breeding of Poland-China hogs, black cattle and Belgian horses. He ships several car loads of stock annually, and is known as one of the best judges thereof in Schuyler County. The farm he occupies has the finest of modern improvements, has special facilities for stock, and is adapted to the various kinds of produce associated with the Central Western States.

Mr. Ridings has always had the best interests of Schuyler County at heart, and has vigorously endorsed good roads, good schools, churches, benevolent organizations, and fraternities. Though not a member, he contributes liberally to the Christian Church, of which his wife is a member, and he has been a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Huntsville, Ill., for many years, having joined the Rushville lodge of the order about 1872. In politics, he is a Democrat, but the emoluments of office have never drawn him from the more peaceful interests of his home. He is a man of the strictest personal honor, the kindest disposition and generosity of heart, and the noblest aims in the large things which make for character and development.

RITCHEY, Francis P.—The influx of settlers into Schuyler County in 1831 included George F. Ritchey, a man with a venturesome spirit, a steady purpose, and considerable mercantile ability. He came from a family of farmers and pioneers, and his father, John Ritchey, was an early arrival in Ohio, where the son was born in 1814. The lad was educated in the early subscription schools, married Lucinda J. Walker, of Cloverport, Ky., and during the summer of 1831 came overland to Illinois, settling on Government land in Rushville Township. Soon afterwards he embarked in the grocery business in the village of Rushville, disposing of the same five years later and purchasing the farm in Rushville Township, which he operated with fair success until his death in 1888. The same courage and capacity of endurance which brought him to the wilds of Illinois induced him to seek his fortune in the gold mines of California in 1850, and he undertook the long journey across the plains in an ox train, driving a team of sturdy oxen from early morn until nightfall for six months. He seems not to have been especially successful as an Argonaut, for in 1853 he returned and took up the burden of farming and stock-raising.

At the age of thirty years Francis P. Ritchey left the home farm in Rushville Township, and went to seek his fortune in the State of Kansas. He had received a practical education in the public schools, had profited by a commercial course in Indianapolis and in Illinois, as in Kansas, engaged in school teaching for several terms. He also embarked on an agricultural enterprise in the latter State, but the uncertainty of the seasons and the failure of crops interfered with the realization of his expectations and he returned to his former home in Rushville Township in 1876. The same year he was united in marriage to Catherine Sands, a daughter of Robert and Frances Sands, natives of Ohio and Kentucky, respectively. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Ritchey: Laura E., wife of Noah Moore, of Rushville; Frances; George F.; and Robert F. These children have all been given excellent educational and general advantages, and are developing into capable and useful members of society. Frances is attending a school of elocution in Chicago; George F. is qualifying as a physician and surgeon at the St. Louis Medical School; and Robert F. is in charge of the old home place in Rushville Township.

At the present time Mr. Ritchey owns 265 acres of land in Section 6, in the above named township, all of it improved, and equipped with modern implements. In addition to general farming he always has on hand various kinds of stock, including high grade horses, cattle and hogs, and is promoting one of the most modern and scientific farming enterprises in the State of Illinois. He is a Republican in politics, has held, among other offices, that of Supervisor of Rushville Township, and with the rest of his family, is a devout and consistent member of the Christian Church. Fraternally, he is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Mr. Ritchey is a man of fine breeding, tact and consideration, and is well informed upon the subjects which interest progressive and intelligent people. Farming has enlarged and broadened his mind and perceptions, instead of narrowing them, as is the case with less inquiring men, and he is physically, mentally and morally, a representative of the best agricultural element of his time and place.

RITTENHOUSE, William.—There is no family in Schuyler County, Ill., which has done more for the cause of temperance, morality and religion than that so well represented by William Rittenhouse, whose homestead is located in Section 16, Bainbridge Township. He was born in the township, half a mile west of his present home, on February 11, 1857, a son of William and Nancy (Kelley) Rittenhouse, who were natives of Switzerland County, Ind., and came to Schuyler County about 1849. In that year he located in Bainbridge Township, which he made his home until his death in 1878, his wife surviving him until 1901. Both were life-long members of the Baptist Church, and true disciples of Christ who devoted their lives to the assistance and uplifting of their fellows. They became the parents of fourteen children (eleven still living), as follows: Henry, who is a farmer in Hardin County, Ill.; Enoch, a farmer of Bainbridge Township; Washington, of Woodstock Township; Sarah, who is now the wife of James Montague, of Norton County, Kans.; Rose Ann, wife of Ebenezer Grist, whose husband is a Bainbridge Township farmer; Marion, a resident of Woodstock Township; Mary, wife of Henry Halfeld, of Norton County, Kans.; Thomas, who died in 1897; William; James, who is living in the Indian Territory; Hiram, a farmer of Brown County, Ill., and Nancy J., now Mrs. Thomas Burnside, living on the old homestead; Della, who died at the age of five years; and an infant, also deceased.

William Rittenhouse was reared on the family farm, attended the district school of his neighborhood, and on February 10, 1876, married Rachel J. Stoneking, a daughter of Washington and Sarah (Wardell) Stoneking, and a native of Bainbridge Township. The young couple then began married life on the farm where the husband was born, remaining there until 1878, when they removed to Norton County, Kans., and after a year's residence there returned to their native township. After renting land for some years, Mr. Rittenhouse bought the interest of the heirs in the old home farm, and again assumed the management of the property, remaining on the homestead until October, 1889, when he sold it and bought eighty acres in Section 16, in the same township.

Mr. and Mrs. Rittenhouse have five children, viz.: Otis L., a farmer of Woodstock Township, who married Eleanor Hudson and has three children—James W., Clifford and Ethel; Nancy L., born in Norton County, Kans., who is the wife of Sylvanus Orr and the mother of William H.; Sarah Jane, wife of Frank Ilman, a farmer residing in Woodstock Township, this county; Mary M., Mrs. Hugh Logsdon, who is the mother of one child, William A.; and Robert S.

For fifty years Mr. Rittenhouse has made his home in Bainbridge Township, and during all this period confidence in his substantial ability and moral strength has been continually strengthening. When he was about twenty years of age he united with the Baptist Church, and for twelve years was an active member of that denomination. He then joined the Free Methodist Church, and has since been one of its most influential adherents. In 1888, when the local society erected a well-arranged and attractive edifice, he was the largest contributor to the work, and has continued to be a leader in its progress. For years he was Superintendent of the Sunday School, and through the organization in which he is so earnest a spirit, splendid work has been accomplished for the Christian cause, while personally, his entire life, inspired by the teachings of his Master, has won the regard of even those who have not agreed with him in denominational matters. For many years he has also been an uncompromising Prohibitionist casting his first presidential vote for John P. St. John. Although his people were Democrats, the moral importance of the temperance cause so forcibly appealed to him that he finally concentrated all his political efforts towards the support of the principles which he so thoroughly believed to be right. In his politics, as in his daily life, he is guided by the code of morals which springs from Christianity, so that even his opponents admire his perfect sincerity and thoroughly honor him.

ROBESON, Banning H., a well known, thriving and much respected farmer of Rushville Township, Schuyler County, Ill., was born in the village of Astoria, Fulton County, Ill., January 30, 1863, a son of Delano G. and Sarah (Hafner) Robeson, whose lives, together with full particulars in regard to the family history on both sides, are portrayed in another sketch in this connection. Delano G. Robeson, having spent all his active years in agricultural pursuits, has now abandoned active labor, and is living in retirement. The early youth of Banning H. Robeson was passed on the paternal farm, and in boyhood he received his education in the common schools. On reaching the period of maturity he applied himself on his own responsibility, his first location being at Christian Neck, whence he moved in 1894 to his present farm. He is the owner of 78 acres of land in Section 9, Rushville Township and his operations thereon have been attended by invariable success.

On April 18, 1888, in Rushville Township, Mr. Robeson was united in marriage with Della V. Anderson, a daughter of Henry Harrison and Hannah (Hindman) Anderson, old settlers of the township. Two boys and two girls resulted from this union, namely: Pearl, Trude, Delano and Homer.

Mr. Robeson takes a good citizen's interest in the public affairs of his locality, and in the spring of 1905, was elected to the office of Road Commissioner, the duties of which he discharged faithfully and efficiently.

ROBESON, Delano G.—The State of Ohio has been a never failing recruiting ground for the successful farmers of Schuyler County, Ill., and a representative of the best to come from that earlier settled community is Delano G. Robeson, the chief activity of whose career lies in the past rather than the present of Astoria Township. Mr. Robeson was born in Danville, Knox County, Ohio, in 1838, and comes of a family long identified with Maryland, where was born the paternal grandfather, Solomon Robeson, the founder of the family in Knox County, Ohio. On the farm in Ohio was born, in 1813, Jacob W. Robeson, father of Delano, and in the same county and State was born Delano's mother, Louise (Giffon) Robeson, in 1820. The maternal grandfather, Robert Giffon, was born in Scotland, and by occupation was a millwright. He was a man of great business sagacity, and became a large landed proprietor in Coshocton County, Ohio, owning at one time 4,000 acres of land near Newcastle, and 3,000 acres in another part of the county. He acquired great general influence, and was one of the very substantial and prominent men of his community.

Jacob W. Robeson was reared on the Ohio farm and eventually embarked in an independent farming enterprise. For a time after his marriage he combined farming and the keeping of a country tavern, thereafter removing from Knox to Coshocton County, Ohio, and still later locating in Fulton County, Ill., bringing his family in 1856 to Astoria Township, in that county, where he was engaged in farming and stock-raising until shortly before his death in 1880. He was a kindly disposed and quite successful man, and left a property which reflected credit upon his industry and good judgment.

Delano G. Robeson came to Rushville, Schuyler County, from Fulton County, in 1870, and two years later, bought sixty acres of land in Sections 10 and 15, Rushville Township, going in debt for the same to the extent of $1,000, for which he paid ten per cent interest. Eventually he added to this property as opportunity came his way, until at present he owns 320 acres, besides two valuable lots in the city of Rushville. For the management of this property Mr. Robeson was well equipped, for he was ever an apt pupil in the public schools, and had so far felt the need of further training that he taught school before and after, in order to complete the course at the Jones Commercial College, at St. Louis. He also gained some business experience as a clerk in the general store of Mr. Scripps, of Rushville. He had a special aptitude for farming, however, and was always glad to get back to the freedom and independence of rural life. In 1892 he temporarily left the farm and located in Rushville, returning to the farm five years later, and in 1905 taking up his permanent residence in the city of Rushville. He has a splendid farm, improved to the best known to the modern agriculturist, and upon it may be found a high grade of horses, cattle and hogs, besides a fine residence and substantial barns and outbuildings. His thousand-dollar debt did not long remain uncanceled, for the debtor was a man of energy and push, who left no stone unturned to achieve the best possible results in his line.

The marriage of Mr. Robeson and Sarah M. Haffner occurred in Fulton County, Ill., in 1862. Mrs. Robeson being a native of Virginia, and born in 1843. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Robeson: Banning H., Rose H., Daniel W., Harry H., Celia M., and Louise V., deceased. Mr. Robeson is a Democrat in politics, and local activity has redounded to clean government and fair official dealing. He served as Assessor of Astoria Township four years and filled the same position in Rushville Township for twelve consecutive years. He was also Collector in Astoria Township two years. Failing health has interfered somewhat with the usefulness and happiness of his later years, but his good spirits remain undiminished, and his interest in the people and happenings around him is as keen as when he was an active co-worker. His inherent honesty and rare good sense have been manifest in all of his dealings with his fellow men, and he enjoys the respect and good will of all who know him.

ROBESON, Jacob H.—An example of intelligent farming and refined country life is found in the home surroundings of Jacob H. Robeson, the greater part of whose career has been spent in Rushville Township, Schuyler County. Mr. Robeson was born on a farm in Ohio in 1853, his parents, Jacob W. and Louise (Giffin) Robeson, being natives of that State. The family moved from Ohio to Fulton County, Ill., when Jacob H. was a young lad, and when he had reached the age of fifteen years, they settled in Schuyler County, where he completed his education in the public schools and developed into a capable farmer and useful citizen. Further particulars in regard to the Robeson family history may be found in a sketch of Delano G. Robeson appearing elsewhere in this connection.

When twenty-one years old, Mr. Robeson contracted the mining fever, which, mentally at least, offered an easy and rapid way to fortune. For three years he worked in the silver mines of Colorado, and at the expiration of that time returned to Schuyler County, content to await the slow but sure rewards of general farming. He still has a fine and valuable farming property, which he has devoted to raising the products for which the Central West is noted, and his buildings and general equipment have always indicated a careful and practical turn of mind. In 1906 Mr. Robeson decided to leave his farm of 200 acres, and bought an attractive cottage on West Lafayette Street, in Rushville, where he is enjoying the comforts of a well spent life and the society of many friends.

In 1880 Mr. Robeson was married to Frances Strong, of Rushville Township, and they have four children, namely: Jacob L., Clarence B., Bertha M., and Grace V. The mother of this family is a daughter of Ennis Strong, a pioneer settler of Pleasantview, Ill., where he operated a grist-mill a number of years. Both of her parents died in Schuyler County. Besides herself there are four sons and three daughters still living, as follows: Thomas, who resides near Lincoln, Neb.; Frank, of Pleasantview, and John, a farmer near that place; Burton, a farmer in Rushville Township; Ella, wife of Lou Kinnear, of Rushville, Ill.; Drudy, wife of George Skiles, of Lincoln, Neb.; and Ida, wife of William Rebmman, who lives just north of Pleasantview.

Although an earnest Democrat since casting his first presidential vote, Mr. Robeson is averse to seeking office, and has never been a candidate for local political honors. He has been a tireless worker, and progressive, thoughtful man, readily adapting himself to the use of such improvements as appealed to his reason and common sense.

RODEWALD, Adolphus Peter.—One of the most striking exemplifications of what resolute persistence, diligent use of opportunity, and fidelity to the dictates of duty will accomplish, in a comparatively brief career, when combined with innate talent, is found in the life of the well-known citizen of Rushville, Schuyler County, Ill., whose name introduces this narrative.

Mr. Rodewald was born in Brooklyn, Schuyler County, Ill., November 4, 1862. He is a son of Charles and Eliese (Peter) Rodewald, natives of Germany, where his father was born February 2, 1826, and his mother, October 15, 1833. Charles Rodewald was a blacksmith by trade, and also carried on farming as a means of livelihood. In the year 1849 he came to America, and soon settled in Schuyler County, Ill., and on March 18, 1852, he was married to Eliese

Philippina Peter, at Rushville. At the outset he followed his trade of blacksmithing, but afterwards abandoned that occupation and engaged in farming, operating also to a large extent in real estate, and at the time of his death being the owner of several valuable farms in Schuyler County. To him and his excellent spouse were born seven children, as follows: Frederick, Charles William, George Herman (who died in infancy), Dorothea Catherine, Adolphus Peter, Eustena Eliese and Benjamin Franklin. The death of Charles Rodewald occurred on June 24, 1878, and that of Eliese (Peter) Rodewald, on November 29, 1895.

Adolphus P. Rodewald attended the public schools of his neighborhood when a boy, and in 1873 removed with his parents to Rushville, becoming a pupil in the Rushville Union School. He was graduated from the Rushville High School in the Class of 1882. For many years he was President of the Rushville High School Alumni Association. His youth was spent on the paternal farm. After his studies were completed he secured a clerkship in a store, where he remained for several years, and subsequently went into business for himself, being engaged in the hardware and implement trade in Rushville, under the firm name of Rodewald & Darnell.

In politics, Mr. Rodewald is a Democrat, and stands high in his party's local councils. In 1890 he was elected County Clerk of Schuyler County, and was re-elected in 1894, and through courteous treatment of the patrons of his office, and strict adherence to duty, he gained an enviable reputation as a county official. At the close of his second term he voluntarily retired from office, and being interested in the Bank of Schuyler County, the board of directors elected him Cashier of the institution, and he has ever since discharged the duties of that position with notable ability and fidelity. Much of the growth and prosperity of this sound and reliable bank is due to his conservative management and untiring efforts. He also serves in the capacity of Secretary of the Farm & Town Loan Association, and is President of the Rushville Telephone Company, a strong local corporation. To every movement or business industry that is for the best interests of this home city, he is ever ready to lend counsel and financial aid.

Mr. Rodewald was united in marriage, at Rushville, Ill., on June 10, 1896, with Bessie C. Dyson, who was born in that city August 2, 1869. Mrs. Rodewald is a daughter of Joseph and Martha (Wheelhouse) Dyson.

In 1900, Mr. Rodewald was elected a member of the Board of Education of the Rushville Union Schools, and was re-elected in 1903, serving several years as President of that body. He was the first graduate of the Rushville High School to be elected a member of the Board of Education. In fraternal circles, he is identified with the Knights of Pythias. He is a man of superior qualities, and is recognized as one of the ablest financiers in Schuyler County.

ROSE, John W.—In its second generation in Schuyler County, Ill., the Rose family has a sterling representative in John W. Rose, a young man with whom to think and plan is to act, and whose many sided capacity and public spiritedness supplies a standard of worth of which any community might well be proud. Mr. Rose is first of all a farmer, and his ability in this direction has been augmented by a variety of general experiences, including prolonged political activity. He is now in his sixth consecutive year as a member of the Board of Supervisors, and during this time he has done much towards the practical development of the township as a member of the committees on roads, bridges and public buildings. He is also serving his twelfth year as Township Treasurer, and has been Township Clerk, and in fact everything afforded by local political preferment. He discharges his responsibilities with rare good judgment, unquestioned integrity, and keen appreciation of the needs and opportunities of the township, and irrespective of political bias, he is thoroughly appreciated by the residents who cherish worth while political and other ideals.

A farmer in Section 1, Hickory Township, Mr. Rose was born in Woodland Township, Schuyler County, October 16, 1871, a son of Samuel J. and Mahala (Fike) Rose, the former of whom was of German ancestry. The elder Rose settled in Fulton County about 1850, and after coming to Schuyler County as a boy, lived for a time with his sister Mary, wife of Squire Butler. He acquired the average education of the country youth, and married, for his first wife Sarah Shaw, who became the mother of three children: Mary, deceased; Stewart E., a farmer in Woodland Township; and Rebecca, wife of Columbus Barker, who reside in Mason County, Ill. After the death of his wife Mr. Rose married Mahala Fike, of which union there was but one child, John W. Samuel J. Rose was born in Ohio, moving from there to Pennsylvania, where his father died, and when he reached Schuyler County, he had nothing in the way of worldly assets to start him upon his independent career. He attained to high honor in the community, became one of its well-to-do and influential farmers, and in politics held among others the office of Township Treasurer. His death occurred March 1, 1895, and that of his wife, January 24, 1905.

The education of John W. Rose was acquired in the country schools, the public schools of Lewistown, and the Western Normal College, which he attended a year. With these advantages as a nucleus, he has been a constant student of men and events, and is one of the best posted of the younger generation of the township. Following close upon the ending of his school days, in 1893 he engaged in the mercantile business in Bluff City, Schuyler County, his integrity and knowledge of his occupation resulting in gratifying financial and general success. Upon the death of his father in 1896, he sold out his business to take charge of the old Rose farm of eighty acres, where he engaged in general farming and stock-raising. Success has enabled him to increase his possessions, and he now owns 120 acres in Section 17, Curtis Township, Fulton County, and 230 acres in Hickory Township, Schuyler County, the latter of which constitutes his home place. He raises general produce and a variety of stock, and his farm land represents the best possible development known to this age of agriculturists.

The marriage of Mr. Rose and Nellie Curless occurred April 9, 1893. Mrs. Rose is a daughter of J. W. and Jane (McIntyre) Curless, the former being one of the leading pioneers of Schuyler County. Both are deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Rose have three children: Beatrice, Clifford J. and Rose Alice. Mr. Rose has a strong and interesting personality, and inspires confidence in all with whom he is ever associated. He is vigorously alert to the advantages and responsibilities of the young men of the present, and contributes his share of character and determination and purpose to the enlightened community of which he is an integral factor. In fraternal circles, he is affiliated with the Masonic Order and the M. W. A.

ROSS, John H., a prosperous and prominent farmer of Littleton Township, Schuyler County, Ill., and one of the leading citizens of his locality, was born in Brooklyn Township, the same county, in July, 1848, a son of Tolbert and Catherine (Snyder) Ross, natives of Kentucky and Virginia, respectively. His paternal grandparents were among the early settlers of Schuyler County, and here the father of the subject of this sketch grew to manhood, and after his marriage to Catherine Snyder, followed farming for several years in Brooklyn Township. Selling out his interests there about the year 1851, Tolbert Ross bought 120 acres of land in Section 16, Littleton Township, subsequently purchasing more until his farm comprised 160 acres. On this place he passed the rest of his life, dying in October, 1857, at the age of 45 years. In 1874, his widow became the wife of John Beadle, of La Prairie, Ill., and lived but a short time after her second marriage, passing away in March, 1875. By the father of the subject of this sketch she had three sons and six daughters, all of whom are still living except a brother, who was the fifth in order of birth. In early youth, John H. Ross received his education in the district schools in the vicinity of his home, assisting his mother on the farm until the time of her marriage to Mr. Beadle. Following that event, he took charge of the estate which he afterward bought. The house originally standing on the property was destroyed by fire in 1881, and in the following year he built the present frame dwelling containing seven rooms. He also put up a horse and hay barn, tiled the ground and made other necessary improvements, until he now has one of the finest farms in the county, adjoining the town of Littleton on the north. He is successfully engaged in general farming, and in addition to this, devotes a portion of his time to raising horses, cattle and hogs. All his undertakings have been attended with profitable results.

On February 10, 1875, Mr. Ross was joined in matrimony with Mary J. Peeckenpaugh, who was born in Littleton Township, Schuyler County, February 6, 1853. Mrs. Ross is a daughter of John and Cassandra (Orvin) Peeckenpaugh, natives of Kentucky. The marriage of her parents took place in Littleton Township. Her father died in 1863, her mother having passed away in 1856. Besides Mary J., they had one other child who died in infancy. In 1881, Mr. and Mrs. Ross moved to Elk County, Kan., where they remained but a short time, returning the following year, and since then occupying the home place. Two children resulted from their union: Oel D., born November 25, 1877, who is a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is located at La Prairie, Ill.; and John Frederick, born November 20, 1882, a physician and surgeon, also residing in that town.

Politically, Mr. Ross is a Prohibitionist, and has taken an active and influential part in the local councils of his party. He has filled various township offices with notable efficiency, including those of Collector, Assessor, Road Commissioner and Justice of the Peace. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he has officiated as Superintendent of the Sunday School since 1898, and Steward since 1885.

ROSS, S. B.,—Schuyler County has no better judge of stock than S. B. Ross, whose forty-four years have been spent in Buena Vista Township, where he was born March 25, 1864, and where he now owns 120 acres of land, and operates six hundred acres. This enterprising landsman is a son of William B. Ross, from whom he learned the rudiments of farming, and under whose careful guidance he was reared to a practical appreciation of his life mission. He was educated in the district schools, but had no advantages over those of his schoolmates who have achieved less success than himself.

At the age of twenty-one years Mr. Ross attained entire control of the home farm, and February 23, 1887, was united in marriage to Mary Moore, daughter of John D. Moore, a sketch of whose life appears on another page of this work. Mrs. Ross was born in Buena Vista Township May 26, 1862, and, like her husband, had only average advantages in her youth. Mr. Ross settled on eighty acres of land in Sections 22 and 27, Buena Vista Township, to which he added until he owned 120 acres. He built a good cottage on the farm, and cleared about thirty acres, making a beautiful and profitable farming property. In 1893 he rented 160 acres in Section 23, moved thereon and operated the same until 1904. The latter year he began to operate 600 acres, the increase made necessary by his rapid rise in the stock industry. Beginning in 1894, he specialized in raising, feeding and shipping cattle and hogs, and at the present time is one of the large-est operators in Schuyler County. He averages about four car loads each year, including about two hundred head of hogs, and at present he has on hand forty-six horses. His farm is equipped with first-class machinery, and general improvements, and in 1907 he raised 130 acres of wheat, and as many of corn. He has made a thorough study of scientific feeding, and has developed a system which makes him one of the most successful men in the business in the State.

Notwithstanding his increasingly large personal responsibility, Mr. Ross has contributed to the well being of the community in many ways, and has filled several important political offices. He is uncompromisingly Democratic, and fraternally is identified with the Modern Woodmen of America. Mr. and Mrs. Ross are parents of seven children, of whom Margaret, a graduate of the Rushville High School, was born January 30, 1888, and for the past two years has been a successful teacher in Schuyler County; Winfield B., a graduate of the high-school class of 1907, was born September 21, 1889; John D. and Mary (twins), were born September 25, 1891; Araminta was born January 3, 1893; Beatrice O. was born in September, 1895; and Samuel S. W. was born June 13, 1905.

RUNKLE, James I., a farmer of high standing and abundant financial resources, an honored veteran of the Civil War, and for thirty years a much respected citizen of Littleton Township, Schuyler County, Ill., was born in Industry Township, McDonough County, Ill., October 6, 1841. His father Darius Runkle, was a native of Champlain County, Ohio, and his mother, Anna M. (Walker) Runkle, was born in Adams County, Pa., near the town of Gettysburg. The paternal grandparents, William and Mary (Pence) Runkle, were Virginians by nativity, while the birth of the grandparents on the maternal side, Andrew and Annie (Wilson) Walker, occurred in Pennsylvania. In 1837, Darius Runkle, father of James I., located in Doddsville, Schuyler County, Ill., and had charge of the general store of Samuel Dodds, for about a year. Then he went back to Ohio, staying a like period there, and returning to Doddsville, where he was united in marriage with Anna M. Walker, in 1840. He made a wedding trip to his native State in a covered wagon, and when the honeymoon was over, came to Brooklyn Township, Schuyler County, and bought 80 acres of land. This he sold after awhile, purchasing 160 acres in Industry Township, McDonough County. There he followed farming until the time of his death, March 13, 1896, at the age of 55 years. His wife died in 1886, when 65 years old. Darius Runkle was a very extensive landholder, one of the largest in Central Illinois. His landed possessions comprised 3,000 acres, including farms in Industry and Bethel Townships, McDonough County, and Littleton Township, Schuyler County. He was a man of much force of character, and considerable prominence in agricultural circles, and wielding a strong influence in his locality. Politically, he was identified with the Republican party. He and his wife had six sons and four daughters, of whom but four sons are now living, the surviving members of the family, besides James I., being J. C., a farmer of Littleton Township; Charles W., of Macomb, Ill.; and George M., who follows farming on the old home place in Industry Township, McDonough County.

James I. Runkle was reared to the life of a farmer, and received his education in the common schools, and in Lewistown (Ill.) Seminary. On August 2, 1861, he enlisted, at St. Louis, Mo., in Company A, Tenth Regiment, Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and served with his regiment in the Army of the Tennessee, during the Civil War. He was within less than a dozen steps of the first commander of his company, Capt. Horney, then Lieutenant Colonel of the regiment, when that officer was killed, at the Battle of Champion Hills. Mr. Runkle was mustered out of service, August 24, 1864, and returned to the home of his parents. After his marriage, he was engaged in operating one of his father's farms in Industry Township, McDonough County, until 1877. In that year, he moved to his present location in Section 4, Littleton Township, a little southwest of the village of Littleton. All of the improvements on this place, which consisted of 160 acres when he took possession, have been made by him, and he has added to its extent, until the property now comprises 320 acres. The farm is in superb condition, and its owner has been signally successful in all his undertakings.

The marriage of Mr. Runkle took place in October, 1871, at which time Caroline M. Legg became his wife. Mrs. Runkle, a woman of the worthiest traits of character, was born in Littleton Township, in December, 1845, and is a daughter of Thomas Legg, a native of Kentucky. The following children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Runkle, namely: Ethlyn (Mrs. Asa Finch), residing in Littleton Township; Roy, a resident of the same township; Lois (Mrs. Otto Baxter), of McDonough County, Ill.; Joseph, who lives with his parents; and Mary, who was married to Randolph Black, of McDonough County.

In political action, Mr. Runkle is identified with the Republican party. His religious connection is with the Presbyterian Church, to which his wife also belongs.

RUNKLE, Joseph C.—The Runkles came from Germany, the grandparents of Darius Runkle being drowned at sea on the trip to America. One of the most familiar names among the farmers of Schuyler County, Ill., is that of Joseph C. Runkle, who is known throughout the country as a man of large landed possessions, extensive agricultural operations, and abundant general resources. He was born in Industry Township, McDonough County, Ill., March 31, 1847, a son of Darius and Ann Maria (Walker) Runkle, pioneer settlers of this locality, coming from Ohio and Pennsylvania. The paternal grandparents, William and Mary (Pence) Runkle, lived in the State of Ohio. Adam Walker, of Adams County, Penn., came to Schuyler County, in 1840, settled on Mr. Dodds' farm. William Runkle was born in Virginia and went to Ohio in an early day following the trade of tanner until 1850, came to Morgan County, Ill., took up land, lived there until close of the war. His wife was born in Virginia, she died at the age of 86. He died at 84. Darius Runkle, was born in Champaign County, Ohio, February 10, 1813, his wife being a native of Pennsylvania, born in Adams County. The father worked at farming two years for $10 per month, after he reached his majority, and was then employed for a like period by his brother-in-law as a general-store clerk in Sidney, Ohio. In the Spring of 1837 he came to Illinois, traveling by boat to Beardstown, Cass County, and walking thence to Doddsville, Schuyler County, being compelled to wade through water two miles of the distance between the two places. At Doddsville, he took charge of the general store conducted by Samuel Dodds, and while thus engaged, entered up 80 acres of Government land. In 1838 he went back to Ohio, and worked two years in a tan yard. Returning to Illinois, he sold the Government tract and bought 160 acres of wild land in McDonough County, which he cleared and improved, and on which he spent the remainder of his days. Soon after his marriage, October 12, 1840, he moved into a log cabin which he had built, living in it until 1866, when he occupied the fine new residence which was afterwards his home and which was the finest in McDonough County, costing $10,000.00. He started with $90, and was obliged to borrow $10 in order to make up the necessary amount wherewith to enter up his first 80 acres. For three years he was a merchant, and was at different times engaged in various lines of business, at one time conducting a stage route. In 1843 and 1844, he held the office of postmaster of Doddsville. For many years he was supervisor of school boards, and together with others, he built the first schoolhouse in his district. In McDonough and Schuyler Counties, he was the owner of more than 3,000 acres of land at the time of his death. 970 in Schuyler County, and 1,940 in McDonough County. Darius Runkle died March 14, 1896, his wife having passed away February 1889. Politically he was a Whig. He voted first for Henry Clay and at the birth of the Republican party he voted for Fremont. He was a generous public spirited citizen, and of noble character. Joseph C. Runkle was reared on the paternal farm in McDonough County, Ill., and received his early education in the district school in the neighborhood of his home. In due course of time (1871), he became possessed of 370 acres of his father's estate in Littleton Township, Schuyler County, and 160 acres in Industry Township, McDonough County. On the latter farm he made his home, improving it, and increasing its extent by purchasing 290 acres more; he did own 120 acres of timber land in McDonough County, but sold this in 1907. He now owns altogether 680 acres all in one body. He has always been engaged in general farming, and besides the cultivation of the soil, raises a large number of hogs, averaging 250 per year. He also feeds many cattle, fattening each year about 100 head. In the fall of 1906, he built a magnificent residence, one of the best in Schuyler County.

The marriage of Mr. Runkle took place February 28, 1877, when he was wedded to Susan Little, who was born in the vicinity of Rushville, Ill., May 13, 1853. Mrs. Runkle is a daughter of Robert and Eliza (Cunningham) Little, natives of Ireland, her father having been born in County Tyrone. The union of Joseph C. Runkle and Susan Little has been the source of seven children, whose names are as follows: George Darius, born February 10, 1879, a physician, located at Industry, Ill.; Robert Clyde, born June 14, 1880, a farmer, of Littleton Township; Cassius Wilson, born December 7, 1882; David Everett, born May 14, 1884; William Lewis, born February 16, 1886; Benjamin Ray, born May 18, 1888; and Grace Maria, born November 30, 1892. The last five are still members of the home circle.

In politics, Mr. Runkle is identified with the Republican party, but is not active in political contests. He is a man of strong character and upright life, and is much respected, as is also his amiable wife, a woman of excellent qualities of head and heart.

RYAN, Edward Joseph.—Of that courageous company known as the very early settlers of Schuyler County, many forms stand out in clearly defined outline, compelling the attention of the present generation by the force of some peculiarity or excellence, and through the gathering haze of years, filters to us somewhat of that steadfastness which enabled them to conquer the wilderness and convert its resources to the betterment of mankind. Few men of wealth came hither to share the discomforts of a transformation period. Wealth stifles ambition, and patience rarely is its boon companion. These men had all to gain, and all to surrender to those who should succeed them. He who could do things was a God-send, and the more useful his requirements the better. How welcome then must have been Charles Ryan in the loneliness of Schuyler County, the establisher of one of the county's best known families, and the grandfather of Edward Joseph Ryan, Circuit Clerk and Recorder of Rushville.

Charles Ryan was born on a farm in Knox County, Ohio, a son of Charles K. and Elizabeth Louise Ryan. He was reared to agriculture, and when old enough to hew his own way went to Cincinnati and learned the shoemaker's trade. He had few clothes and less money, but had the splendid freedom of choice denied so many, and he merrily trudged all the way across country from Cincinnati to Schuyler County, with a kit of shoemaker's tools on his back, content to bide the unfolding of the future, and satisfied with the present so long as he could fast or feast, and so long as the night's blue curtain was swung in the sky for his sleeping tent. It is not known why his journeying ceased at this particular place, but perhaps the open road had become wearisome, and besides he had the spirit of the great unrest which clamors for occupation of hand and brain. When he began to make shoes in Rushville the town had few houses, but he built up a steady business, and he also engaged in brickmaking, being the first to manufacture brick in Rushville. He was intimately connected with the life of the town and surrounding country, held numerous local offices, and served as one of the guards at the time of the McFadden hanging at the Crane Creek bridge, east of Rushville. Mr. Ryan lived to be a very old man, and his wife, formerly Margaret Strong, was spared to share many years with him.

Edward Joseph Ryan was born on a farm west of Rushville, April 22, 1876, a son of William M. Ryan, who was born in Rushville, and who was one of the numerous progeny of the pioneer shoemaker. Rebecca Anna (Miller) Ryan, the mother of Edward Joseph, was born in Decatur, Ill., a daughter of Jonathan and Martha E. (Baird) Miller, natives respectively of Decatur and Louisville, Ky., and grand-daughter of Thomas Baird and Catherine (Bell) Miller, both born in Louisville. Edward Joseph attended the country school until it had nothing further to teach him, then graduated from the Rushville High School, and also from the three years' course of the Rushville Normal, Business College. For three years he engaged in educational work in Rushville, and in the meantime developed a taste for politics, and through his allegiance to and support of the Democratic party, was elected Circuit Clerk and Recorder, for which office he has just received re-nomination. He is fraternally connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias and Modern Woodmen of America. Mr. Ryan represents the reliable material from which the working forces of the immediate future are to be recruited for, though having only reached the age of thirty years, he is well established as an important factor in local affairs, and possesses those qualities of progression and enterprise, of integrity and general worth, which bespeak a larger usefulness than he has thus far achieved.

RYAN, Thomas.—No family established in Schuyler County during the 'thirties is more substantially represented at the present time than that of Charles Ryan, father of Thomas Ryan, of whom extended mention is made elsewhere in this connection. Mr. Ryan, among other claims upon the gratitude and appreciation of his successors, manufactured the first brick in Rushville Township, and also followed the trade of shoemaking for several years. The mantle of his energy and resourcefulness has fallen on his sons, and of these, Thomas Ryan is a successful farmer and stock raiser of Rushville Township.

Mr. Ryan was born October 20, 1845, in Buena Vista Township, Schuyler County, and remained on his father's place until his twenty-third year. He then married Ellen Shields, a native of Ohio, and settled on a farm of his own, which he since has brought to a high state of cultivation. Mrs. Ryan's father and mother came to Rushville in 1857, and the former, who enlisted in the Union Army as a member of the One Hundred and Nineteenth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, died while in the service. Mr. and Mrs. Ryan are the parents of the following children: Martin, Josie, Homer, Minnie, Herman, Clarence, Lillie and Lena. Mr. Ryan is a Democrat, in politics, and has held the office of Supervisor of his township. He is a progressive farmer, well informed on current events, and a staunch promoter of all that tends to the greater enlightenment of the community.

SARGENT, Charles E., who is recognized as one of the most thorough, painstaking and systematic farmers and stock raisers of Buena Vista Township, Schuyler County, Ill., as well as one of the worthiest citizens of his locality, was born in Rushville Township, Schuyler County, one mile east of Rushville, September 12, 1865. He is a son of John and Sarah (Potter) Sargent, both natives of Hastings, England. The paternal grandfather, also an Englishman, died in the land of his birth. His son John was the only member of the family to cross the Atlantic. One of the Potters, the mother of Charles E. and one of her sisters were the ones who made their homes in the United States. John Sargent, the father, had two brothers who lost their lives from wounds received in battle while serving in the British army. John Sargent, Jr., made his advent in this country in 1858, coming to Schuyler County, Ill., and locating in Rushville, where he entered the employ of Little & Ray. After remaining with this firm for a while, he settled on a farm in Buena Vista Township, where he was engaged in tilling the soil for a number of years. On retiring from active pursuits he spent his days with Charles E. and another son, James, until the time of his death, January 5, 1904. His widow survived him a short time, passing away September 11, 1905. The father was a very industrious and upright man, and was a devout Christian, as was also the mother, both being members of the Presbyterian Church. The latter was sorely afflicted for a long period, but bore her sufferings with pious fortitude and resignation. They were the parents of thirteen children, eight of whom were born in England, and five in Schuyler County. Of the entire family, eleven are now living, Elizabeth, the fourth child, having died when seventeen years old, and Ann, the seventh, at the age of eighteen years. Those surviving are: Sarah, wife of Frank Graff, a retired farmer of Good Hope, McDonough County, Ill.; John, who is engaged in farming in Littleton Township, Schuyler County; Mary, wife of a resident of Englewood (Chicago); Hannah, who married A. J. Tolin, a resident of Pasadena, Cal.; Thomas, who follows farming in the vicinity of Cortland, Neb.; George, who is living in Memphis, Tenn.; William, a farmer whose home is near Adrian, Hancock County, Ill.; James, whose farm is in Oakland Township, Schuyler County; Caroline, who became the wife of Josiah Whitehead, a farmer residing near Panora, Iowa; Charles E.; and Ethel, who was married to Edwin Armour, a farmer, of Buena Vista Township. Politically, the father of this family was identified with the Democratic party.

In boyhood, Charles E. Sargent attended school near his home in a schoolhouse that was destroyed by fire, and was afterwards a pupil of the Ross district school, in Buena Vista Township. During the greater portion of his youth he was kept at home to lighten the burden of care upon his parents, remaining with them until the time of his marriage. After that event he followed farming on rented land for about twelve years, when he rented the farm of 300 acres in Section 14, Buena Vista Township, which he has since conducted. His farming operations have been very successful, and in feeding live stock, especially, the results of his labors have been profitable. He has turned off from 150 to 200 hogs each year; and about forty head of cattle at intervals of two years. For stock or feeding purposes, he prefers the Black or Short-horn breed. He raises 100 acres in small grain yearly, and a like acreage of corn. He is the owner of a fine prairie land farm of eighty acres in Guthrie County, Iowa, all tillable. By his diligent application to work and his strict integrity, he has won the implicit confidence of all with whom he has had business relations, and is regarded as a model farmer and an exemplary member of the community.

The marriage of Mr. Sargent took place October 27, 1887, on which date he was wedded to Catherine R. Young, who was born in Wilmington, Del., March 13, 1864. Mrs. Sargent, a woman of most excellent traits of character, is a daughter of Samuel and Margaret (McFeeters) Young. In 1877, she came to Schuyler County with her parents, who settled on a farm in Buena Vista Township, where Mr. Young still lives. His wife departed this life in January, 1905. Besides Mrs. Sargent, they had two other children, namely: John, who is engaged in farming in Buena Vista Township, and Martha B., who takes care of her father's domestic affairs. Mr. and Mrs. Sargent have four children, as follows: Paul, born February 19, 1889, and living with his parents; Clarence, born February 15, 1891; Lillian, born June 10, 1892; and Harold, born August 11, 1895. All were born in Rushville Township, the birth of Lillian and Clarence occurring in the same house where their father was born, and which is known as "the old toll gate." The parents of this family are members of the Presbyterian Church, of Rushville. In his political attitude, Mr. Sargent has never been a strict partisan, using his judgment freely in the exercise of the elective franchise, and latterly voting the Prohibition ticket. He is a man of genial temperament and very agreeable manners, and all who have become closely acquainted with him may be counted on as his friends.

SCHENCK, Myron Clark, M. D., a well known physician, of Rushville, Ill., whose solid professional attainments and skillful practice have won for him a high standing in the city and its environs, was born in Fulton County, Ill., February 20, 1873, a son of M. P. and Mary C. (McLaren) Schenck, both natives of that county. In early youth Dr. Schenck received his preliminary education in the public schools of Bushnell, McDonough County, Ill., after which he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Keokuk, Iowa, and graduating from that institution in 1895. He at once commenced the practice of his profession at Littleton, Ill., and during the same year moved to Rushville, where he established his office, and has since remained. He has acquired a large and successful practice, and is recognized as one of the most efficient and reliable physicians in Schuyler County. Dr. Schenck was married in 1893 to Martha L. Wilson, who was born in Fulton County, Ill., where she received her education in the public schools. Their union has been the source of two children, namely: Olivia and Paul. As an individual, a citizen and a medical practitioner, the record of Dr. Schenck is of the highest character.

SCHULTZ, Judge Hermann C.—The long, honorable and useful career of Judge Hermann C. Schultz must ever elicit admiration and commendation from all true appreciators of the fundamental qualities which, nurtured through the centuries of the German Fatherland, and transferred through migration to the more virile opportunities of America, constitute the best qualities in citizenship which communities have to offer. Judge Schultz has grown old in the field of agriculture and politics, and has inscribed his name indelibly upon the history of Schuyler County.

Born in Hoffleburg, Prussia, October 2, 1832, Hermann C. Schultz is a son of Johann and Elizabeth (Felech) Schultz, the former of whom was a sugar refiner in Germany, and died about 1846. The wife, who survived him until 1858, brought her family to America in 1852, and spent the last days of her life in Texas. Hermann C. received a common school education in his native land, and at the age of fifteen was apprenticed to a baker for three years, thereafter working as a journeyman in different parts of Germany for two years. Attracted by the reports that came to him from this side the water, he set sail from Hamburg, and after two months upon the sea arrived in Galveston, Tex., where he was variously employed until 1857. He then came to Schuyler County and engaged in farming in Hickory Township, which ever since has been his home. He at first rented land, but finally bought forty acres, to which he added until he owned 263 acres. The development of this property represented his life ambition, and was accomplished with the patience, skill and good judgment for which the Teuton is justly famed. Eventually he sold the larger part of his land holdings and returned to the forty acres originally purchased, which now is his home. From 1894 until 1906 he conducted a mercantile business in Sheldon Grove, and was also Postmaster of the village. Since then he has lived in retirement.

While in Houston, Tex., March 5, 1854, Mr. Schultz was united in marriage to Anna Hendenreich, a native of Germany, and daughter of Adam Hendenreich, who, upon his first trip to America, was shipwrecked in mid-ocean, and, climbing to the top of a mast, hung there for two days ere he was rescued. Mr. Hendenreich eventually located in Houston, Tex., and soon after enlisted in the Mexican War. Having left his wife and four sons and one daughter in the old country, he was joined by them in 1849, and locating in Schuyler County, engaged in farming until his death in 1859. Simon Hendenreich, one of his sons, served in the Civil War as a soldier in the Third Illinois Cavalry, and his son Fred was a member of the Eleventh Illinois Cavalry, commanded by Col. Robert G. Ingersoll. Mr. and Mrs. Schultz are the parents of the following children: Harmon H., who resides near Table Grove, Ill.; Charles E., who died at the age of eleven years; Julius C.; Callie, widow of George Flinn, and mother of two children; Laura, deceased; Emma, wife of J. A. Breen, of Peoria, and mother of one child; Ferdina, married to Helen Kelly, and living in Peoria; Nellie, deceased; and Peter, married to Daisy Reed, and living on his father's home farm. Judge Schultz and wife have been members of the Methodist Episcopal Church since 1860, and have been active in promoting the best interests of both church and Sunday school. All of their children are connected with the same church, and all are young people of character and ability, having been trained with due regard to their position as useful men and women of their respective communities.

Many of the most vivid memories of Judge Schultz are connected with his life as a soldier of the Union during the Civil War. No braver fighter ever shouldered a gun or shared in the terrible experiences and privations of warfare. Enlisting in Company F, One Hundred and Eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in August, 1862, he was mustered out of the service at Vicksburg, Miss., in August, 1865, having participated in all of the battles of his regiment, and escaped without wounds, illness or imprisonment. The One Hundred and Eighth was one of the most active regiments of the war, and its soldiers were rarely far from the fighting line. It won many distinctions, and Mr. Schultz, for bravery, was promoted from private to Second Lieutenant. His account of the war is both instructive and interesting, and like all faithful wearers of the blue, he delights to live over again the incidents which

Early in life Mr. Schultz became interested in Democratic politics, and a reflection of his ability and honesty exists in the fact that he has filled practically all of the township offices, including that of Supervisor for ten years. He was Justice of the Peace for twenty years, and in 1890 was nominated for County Judge and elected by a large majority, holding the office four years. During that time he demonstrated a high order of justice and wisdom, his decisions suffering but one reversal, and all others standing the test of the Supreme Court of the State. His term expired December 1, 1894, and he thereupon engaged in the mercantile business as heretofore stated. Judge Schultz has the substantial and dependable qualities which win long friendships, long tenure of office and continuous influence for good. Even his private life has its enduring compensations, for he recently celebrated his golden wedding, receiving renewed assurance of the gratitude and good will of the community he so faithfully and wisely has served. He represents that class of German-American citizens who, while retaining the accent and general characteristics of their nation, yet enter with heart and soul into the most dangerous as well as most pleasant and profitable demands of their adopted country. Judge Schultz has been a Mason for many years, being a member of the Astoria (Ill.) Lodge, and is also member of Schuyler Lodge No. 209, Knights of Pythias.

SCOTT, Thomas W., M. D.—The life of a faithful and conscientious physician is burdened with serious responsibilities and heavy cares. If animated by the ideal spirit of his profession, he must necessarily carry with him, night and day, a chivalrous sympathy with the suffering of his patients and a keen sensitiveness to the correctness of his diagnoses, the efficiency of his pathological methods and the probable results in each case of severe sickness. As a counteractive of this mental friction and anxiety, he has a consciousness that the general results of his daily ministrations is the alleviation of pain, checking of the ravages of disease and saving a human life.

Such, doubtless, is the long continued experience of the worthy gentleman whose name stands at the head of this biographical record, and who is a prominent resident of Rushville, Schuyler County, Ill., where he is successfully engaged in the practice of his profession. For almost a score of years Dr. Scott has practiced medicine in Rushville, and has achieved a degree of success possible only to the man of clearly defined purpose, with unbounded faith in himself and his work. The doctor is a native of Scott County, Ky., where he was born April 18, 1848, the son of Thomas West and Catharine (Fitzgerald) Scott, natives of Maryland and Kentucky, respectively. His paternal grandparents were Amos and Nancy A. (West) Scott, whose birth occurred in Maryland. At least three generations of his family pursued their various occupations in Maryland, his father having been born in Montgomery County, in that State, in 1808, and his grandfather, Amos Scott, in 1777. His grandmother, Nancy A. (West) Scott, and his paternal great-grandparents, William and Margaret (Davis) Scott, were natives of the same State. On the maternal side his grandparents were Jesse and Lucretia (Sheller) Fitzgerald, the former born in Virginia and the latter a native of Hagerstown, Md., and his maternal great-grandparents were William and Catherine (Neville) Fitzgerald. The family moved to Scott County, Ky., in 1814, when Thomas W., Sr., was six years old, locating near Georgetown, where the lad grew to maturity, and where he was married to Catherine Fitzgerald, of Lexington. In 1832, Dr. Scott's father came to Buena Vista Township, Schuyler County, Ill., then a sparsely settled locality, in the upbuilding of which he was destined to become a practical and substantial factor. His days passed with the usual tasks and diversions of the progressively inclined landowner, and his death occurred January 22, 1885, at the age of seventy-seven years.

Dr. Scott obtained his primary education in the public schools of Schuyler County, and his classical training at Monmouth (Ill.) College. In 1881 he began the study of medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. G. P. Knapp, of Mount Vernon, Mo., and afterward attended lectures at the Missouri Medical College in St. Louis, from which he was graduated in March, 1884. During the next year he practiced medicine in Mount Vernon, Mo., and then moved to Rushville, which has since been his home, and where he has built up a remunerative practice. He was appointed County Physician in 1902, and has held other positions of importance commensurate with his professional skill. He was member of the County Board of Supervisors for Rushville Township for two years, and is now President of the Board of United States Pension Examiners. Politically, he is firm in his allegiance to Democratic principles. Dr. Scott is a sympathetic, earnest man, striving to attain the best ideals of his profession, and applying his knowledge with rare discretion and excellent results.

SETTLES, Gilderoy.—An example of inspiring adaptation to the agricultural life, an expression of that resource, business insight, unremitting industry, wise investment, keen grasp of the political, social and general situation, and shrewd knowledge of human nature which lifts a man to the highest country achievement and usefulness, is found in the career of Gilderoy Settles, a retired resident of Rushville, who in youth knew but moderate advantages, and in later life is the owner of 680 acres of farm lands, besides several town lots and dwellings in Schuyler County, and 320 acres of prairie land in Clark County, Kan. The acquisition of these valuable holdings has been gradual and legitimate, and in his accomplishment the owner sends out from his own to the lives of those around him the most wholesome and beneficent encouragement. This ex-soldier of the Union and observing traveler has spent more than half a century of his life in this county, and in Rushville Township has bought and sold more land than any other dweller within its borders. No one has contributed more substantially to the making of local history, or to the character, purpose and integrity of this part of Illinois.

A native of Kirtin Township, Fulton County, Ill., Mr. Settles was born November 14, 1837, a son of William Settles, who, born in Tennessee, journeyed overland to the wilderness of Greene County, Ill., about 1827. To his frontier cabin William Settles brought a wife, formerly Miss Moody, and here were born two children, Charles and Jordan C., both of whom survived their mother's death in Greene County. Mr. Settles changed his habitation to Fulton County, Ill., about 1833, and here was united in marriage to Peggy Carlock, who became the mother of the following children: Polly Ann, who died in Schuyler County, and whose husband, Abram Weddle, died in Iowa; David J., a soldier of the Union during the Civil War, who died at Helena, Ark., and whose body was sent home for burial; Serena, deceased wife of Seth Griggs, of Clinton, Mo.; Penina, wife of John Strawsbaugh, a farmer of Table Grove Township, McDonough County, Ill.; Fluent, deceased wife of John Flint; and Josiah, who died at Sedalia, Mo., December 28, 1905. The mother of these children died in Fulton County, and about 1850 Mr. Settles located in Browning Township, Schuyler County, from whence he moved to Morgan County, Ill., where his death occurred about 1868.

The environment of Gilderoy Settles in Fulton County was extremely crude, and now that success has abundantly crowned his efforts, no memory is so dear to him as that of the crackling log in the fireplace, the dim light of the tallow dip, the school house on the hill, the river sparkling in the sunlight, and the mill wheezing away the days in its mission of food grinding. His undeveloped strength was sorely taxed with the hard and exacting duties of the home farm, yet in the open he developed a fine constitution and healthy ambitions, also a keen appreciation of the dignity and nobility of the calling of his sires. He was about fourteen years old when he came with his father to Schuyler County in the early 'fifties and he continued to live at home until his marriage, in 1857, to Penina Tracy, who was born in Fulton County, Ill., May 14, 1835, a daughter of Lyman Tracy, a native of New York State, and one of the early settlers of Fulton County. With his wife Mr. Settles established a home on eighty acres of unimproved land in Browning Township, for which he paid a dollar an acre, the same skirting Sugar Creek, a friendly little stream that added much to the value and prospects of his farm. His first home was a log cabin of small dimensions, but comfortable withal for those days, and here was born his son, Leander, May 28, 1859, and his daughter, Florentine, March 31, 1865. Leander, whose sketch appears in another section of this work, married Jessie Rebman, and they have four children: Harry, Anna, Hiliiah, and Lura. He is now a retired farmer living in Rushville. The daughter Florentine, married Clementine Milby, and they live on a farm in Rushville Township, with a family of three children: Gertrude, Ruth and Edward.

With that commendable zeal which has characterized all of his life undertakings, Mr. Settles enlisted, March 15, 1865, in Company 1, Third Illinois Cavalry, for one year, and was sent to Springfield, Ill., and to Eastport, Miss., remaining there until the surrender of Lee at Appomattox, April 9, 1865, five days before the assassination of President Lincoln. From there the soldiers were sent to St. Louis, Mo., and thence to St. Paul, Minn., where they went into camp at Fort Snelling. One morning early they were ordered out after the Indians, whom they ran to Devil's Lake and out of the Territory. They had many opportunities to fish and hunt, but finally were ordered back to Fort Snelling, discharged and sent to Springfield, Ill., where they were mustered out of the service. Returning to his cabin on Sugar Creek, Mr. Settles learned of the birth of his daughter, Florentine, during his absence, and he again took up the burden of farming, wielding with renewed vigor his implements of husbandry with peace and good fellowship.

In 1867 Mr. Settles changed his home to a farm of 180 acres in Browning Township, a rough timbered property that left much to be desired in the way of improvement. Here was born April 14, 1866, his son, Walter Logan, who married Nola Robeson, is now a farmer in Rushville Township, and has six children—Earl, Ralph, Melvin, Manford, Edith and Edna; Dora, born August 8, 1870, is wife of William Carty, and mother of Clyde B. and Charles Carty; Charles R., born December 29, 1873, married Myrtle Simpson, and lives on a farm in Rushville Township; Orpha, born July 12, 1876, on the farm where Adam Rebman now lives, and who is the wife of William Phillips, and mother of four children, two of whom died in infancy, those living being Ibanda and Hildreth Eva. In 1875 Mr. Settles sold his farm and bought land now owned by Mr. Rebman. His wife died October 16, 1892. She was a noble and lovable woman, possessed a host of friends, and was sadly missed by her immediate family and by many who had known the charm of her personal sympathy and hospitality. December 25, 1895, Mr. Settles married Clara Elizabeth Zeigler, who was born in York County, Pa., January 31, 1864, a daughter of Samuel and Rebecca Zeigler, both of whom still live in the Quaker State. Mr. Zeigler is a machinist by occupation, and during the war was employed by the Government as a bridge builder, and also assisted in the construction of Fort Monroe. Calvin Zeigler, a brother of Mrs. Settles, is a prosperous farmer in Browning Township.

Having abandoned for all time the responsibilities of farming, Mr. Settles and his wife started upon an extended western journey in November, 1906, visiting Pike's Peak, Manitou, the Garden of the Gods, and other places of interest in Colorado, thereafter extending their trip to Los Angeles, San Francisco, and other points in California. His many sided experiences and keen observations as a traveler were enjoyed by his many friends in Rushville and Schuyler County through the publication of letters written by him and published in the Citizen and other home papers. Returning to the county that has known and appreciated him for so many years, Mr. Settles took up his abode in his present delightful residence on Jefferson Street, Rushville, which he had purchased in 1906, and in which on March 10, 1907, he began a less arduous life than he hitherto had lived. This home is presided over by a gracious and accomplished wife, who understands the art of rendering comfortable those around her, and who is highly esteemed by all who are privileged to enjoy her acquaintance. Besides his home, Mr. Settles owns twelve other town lots and three dwellings in Rushville, three lots in Long Beach, Cal., and eleven lots in Beardstown, Ill. In all he has bought and sold in Rushville Township, 1,200 acres of land, a record unapproached by any other of its agricultural upbuilders. As before stated, he paid one dollar an acre in gold for his first farm, going in debt for a part of it, and for his last land he paid $125 an acre, and now refuses $150 for the same. No finer or more productive property is to be found in the Central West, due principally to the careful methods of rotation, fertilization and general cultivation observed by the owner.

Possessing so unmistakably the faculty of accumulation, Mr. Settles naturally has gravitated towards banking, and is one of the stockholders of the Bank of Schuyler County. Politically he is a Republican, but no partisan, and no amount of persuasion has caused him to invade the ranks of office holders. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, Colonel Horney Post, and prominent at reunions and general post undertakings. Personally, a genial, confidence inspiring and forceful man, Mr. Settles has won and kept friends all along his vigorous and purposeful life, and everywhere that he is known, is regarded as an excellent neighbor, loyal friend, interesting companion and dependable country gentleman.

SETTLES, Leander, who may fitly be classed among the most prosperous and substantial farmers of Rushville Township, Schuyler County, Ill., and one of the leading citizens of his community, was born in Browning Township, Schuyler County, Ill., May 28, 1859, a son of G. R. and Penina Settles, natives of Illinois. In early youth Mr. Settles attended the Mt. Zion school, and when his father moved to Frederick Township, continued his school attendance there. In 1882, he accompanied his father's family on their removal to Rushville, and has since made his home in Rushville Township. After his marriage, Mr. Settles bought a farm of eighty acres in Rushville Township, on which he remained until 1898, when he sold his land, buying eighty acres in Sections 23 and 27, in the same township. There he made improvements by rearranging, putting out fruit and ornamental trees, shrubbery, etc. Having an ambition to spread out and farm on a larger scale, he rented out his little farm and in the spring of 1904, moved to the 360-acre farm of his father, equipped himself with plenty of good teams and machinery, and by raising a good grade of stock, especially hogs, made a success in the operation of this tract of land, and was recognized by the people of the community as one of the most enterprising, progressive and successful farmers in the township. In the year 1905 he sold the part of his farm lying in Section 27 for $125 per acre, and bought a quarter-section in Beadle County, S. Dak., for $21 per acre. This farm he kept one year, when he disposed of it at $29 per acre and invested in eighty acres of land lying in Section 26, Rushville Township, which makes 120 acres owned by him at the present time.

Mr. Settles was married, May 9, 1885, to Jessie R. Rehman, who was born in Browning Township, Schuyler County, March 14, 1866, a daughter of Adam and Lavinia Rehman. The father of Mrs. Settles was one of the pioneers of Schuyler County. Four children were the issue of this union, as follows: Harvey R., born August 9, 1886; Annie L., born March 29, 1888; Hilah Penina, born June 20, 1891; and Lura Irene, born December 18, 1897. Harvey R., who is a farmer in Rushville Township, was married to Nora Garrison, June 19, 1904, and they have two children—Madeline C., born December 30, 1904, and Harold, born October 20, 1906. Annie L. is the wife of Ralph J. Ewing, also a farmer of Rushville Township, to whom she was married May 29, 1907. Hilah Penina was married to George Garrison, of Rushville, May 3, 1908, and Lura is with her parents.

In politics, Mr. Settles is a Republican, and has filled various township offices, and is now Township Trustee. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the I. O. O. F., the R. N. of A., and the M. W. A. While not a church member, he has always been liberal in support of church work. Socially, Mrs. Settles, a most estimable woman, is connected with the Royal Neighbors. She is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, with which she united in girlhood. Both husband and wife stand high in the estimation of all who know them.

In the fall of 1907, Mr. Settles, having decided to retire from farming, bought property in the city of Rushville, locating there on October 30 of that year. Always entertaining a fondness for travel, for a man engaged in the occupation of farming, he has spent much time thus employed, having visited about half of the States of the Union, besides portions of Canada, the aggregate of his touring as shown by his diary, covering 25,000 miles.

SHELLY, D. Franklin.—During his long and industrious life, D. Franklin Shelly has wielded the weapons of war as well as the implements of peace, but it is in the latter capacity that his name is enrolled upon the annals of Schuyler County, of which he has been a resident since the spring of 1870, and where he now is living in practical retirement upon his 300-acre farm in Section 9, Hickory Township. Mr. Shelly was born in Augusta County, Va., February 11, 1835, and is one of the three surviving of eight children of Daniel and Katharine (Hafner) Shelly, who came from Virginia to Fulton County, Ill., during the summer of 1856. The elder Shelly was a man of quiet tastes and ambitions, but he succeeded at farming and won the good will and esteem of his fellow men. At the time of his death in 1885 he had been a widower for ten years. Of his children, W. H. is a farmer of McDonough County, and James A. lives in Woodland Township, Fulton County.

Twenty-one years of age when he accompanied the rest of his family to Fulton County in 1856, D. Franklin Shelly had acquired a fair education in the subscription and common schools of his native State, and had been thoroughly drilled in farming as practiced in the South. He adapted himself readily to Northern conditions, however, and was in practical command of his father's farm when the call to arms in August, 1862, drew him from peaceful and accustomed tasks to the turmoil and uncertainty of warfare. Enlisting in Company H, Eighty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, as Corporal, he participated in all of the marches and battles of the company until his discharge from the service in March, 1865, on account of a gun-shot wound received in the vicinity of Atlanta, Ga. While recuperating from this wound he was in the United States Hospital at Camp Butler, Ill., and he still has in his possession the bullet extracted by the surgeon, which had passed through his shoulder from front to back. He was as brave a soldier as represented the strength and valor of Illinois, and his martial experiences included many occasions in which he figured as the good and generous genius of the suffering and dying. Few are more consistent or accurate narrators of events connected with the Civil War, and in few were the benefits of peace more deeply ingrafted.

Continuing to farm in Fulton County after his return from the war, Mr. Shelly married, February 22, 1870, Mary E. Sackman, who was born in Mason County, Ill., in September, 1846, a daughter of John W. Sackman, an early but now deceased farmer of Schuyler County. The first investment of Mr. Shelly after his marriage was in a farm of 120 acres in Hickory Township, Schuyler County, which he later sold and then bought his present farm of 300 acres in Section 9. On his farm Mr. Shelly has raised general produce and stock, and has many fine improvements, having modern barns, well kept fences and a large and comfortable country home. Some time since he laid aside the cares of the farm and is enjoying the later years of his life in restful quiet, a consummation merited by more than thirty years of continuous effort, and by practical financial results which remove him from the possibility of all monetary dissatisfaction. While in no sense a partisan, he votes the Republican ticket for national and State affairs, but locally supports the man best suited to the responsibilities of his office. While not a member of any church, his generosity in support of church and charitable organizations is well known, and he is a much appreciated member of the local lodge of Masons. Of the four children which have comprised his family one died in infancy; Charles H. was born in 1872, married Miss Ella Burrows and has two children, Gwendolen and Lois; Charles operates a part of his father's farm; Lida M., born in February, 1876, is the wife of J. M. Todd, of Astoria; and Harry F., born September 14, 1882, is living on the home place. Mr. Shelly bears well his seventy-three years, and his heart is as young and spirits as fine as if he were but half that old. He has known how both to make and to keep friends, and his standing in the community is based upon an upright, conscientious and industrious life.

SKILES, Francis M.—The frontiersmen who settled in Schuyler County in the immediate wake of the Indian, reared large claims for themselves and splendid hopes for their progeny. Although the majority of their characters and labors are mistily set in the framework of history, they yet live in those who bear their name, and who represent in many instances the acme of purpose, endeavor and vitality of the early part of another century. George Skiles, who arrived when the last century was a quarter old, was born in Pennsylvania, settled in his youth in Kentucky, and, hearing the call of the prairies, undertook the arduous journey to Wayne County, Mo., then an unblinded wilderness. About 1825, accompanied by his wife, who formerly was Mary Justus, and several of their children, he came to Browning Township, Schuyler County, taking up government land shortly after on what then was called Rushville Prairie, in what is now the township of that name. Here he encountered all of the crudities and deprivations of the frontier, and upon arising in the morning could see the smoke arising from the cabins of all the settlers for miles around. The buffalo trails still were clearly defined, and although the rough outlines of the wigwam had disappeared, the former owners of these quaint habitations frequently returned to what, for centuries, had been the happy hunting ground of their sires. For the most part they were subdued and harmless red-men, but the settlers had many disagreeable experiences with those who could not forget their wrongs, and who bitterly resented the encroachments of the palefaced brethren. This early arrival cleared considerable of his land and advanced from dire poverty to comparative affluence, his useful life coming to an end while bitter warfare raged between the North and South in 1863. The wife, who survived him until 1874, was the mother of thirteen children, two of whom are still living: Mary, widow of Hiram Scott, who has kindly contributed the facts of this biography, and James Skiles, a resident of Alma, Neb. At the age of ninety-three years, Mrs. Scott, in the enjoyment of excellent health and retaining her faculties to an unusual degree, is now making her home with her daughter, Mrs. Sarah Robertson, wife of Alexander Robertson, son of William Robertson, the latter one of the first settlers of Browning Township.

Rev. William Skiles, son of George Skiles, was born in Wayne County, Mo., and was a small boy when the family came to Illinois. He had few opportunities on Rushville Prairie, but he had ambitions and great religious zeal, early in life becoming converted to the Union Baptist faith, in which he prepared for the ministry. He had a quarter-section of land offered him on the prairie, but he preferred to settle in the timber along the stream, and with the cultivation of this land as one of his life objects, he became a circuit-rider with his brother John, the latter having prepared for the ministry in the Methodist Episcopal Church. These two self-sacrificing brothers rode together over Illinois, Iowa and Nebraska, enduring all of the hardships known to the circuit-riders of the frontier and accomplishing a world of good among the isolated settlers. Really lofty and grand traits of character are attributed to William Skiles, traits which grew in strength up to the time of his death, April 12, 1907, at the age of eighty-six years. Of his nine children three died in infancy and six are still living, Francis M. Skiles, whose name heads this sketch, being the oldest. Elizabeth is the wife of Frank Heathers, of Seattle, Wash.; George lives in Republic City, Neb.; Sarah is the wife of A. Russell, of Alma, Neb.; William P. lives near Republic City, Neb.; and Nettie is the wife of Jackson Gildersleeve, of Huntley, Neb. The mother of these children formerly was Sarah Luttrell, more extended mention of whom may be found in the sketch of William C. Skiles.

Born in Browning Township, Schuyler County, Ill., December 2, 1843, Francis M. Skiles was reared to the life of the farm, and always has made this the setting of his life occupation. His education was acquired in the district schools, often under great difficulties, and the foundation thus supplied has been strengthened and enlarged by almost continuous later research. His early financial status became apparent at the time of his marriage to Malinda Geer, a native of Browning Township, and daughter of Dyer Geer, one of the early settlers of this part of the State. Mr. Skiles had to borrow the money of his father for his marriage certificate, and so poor were both of the parties to the alliance, that they continued to live with their respective parents until better times dawned. Finally the bridegroom succeeded in saving thirty dollars, with which he bought a simple housekeeping outfit, and rented a log cabin from Roswell Brines, the bridal gifts including a colt from the elder Skiles and a heifer from the bride's father. The farm was bottom land, damp and illy drained, and as Mr. Skiles was soon taken with chills and fever, it became necessary to abandon his first field of independent endeavor. With an old plug team which had been added to his possessions, he move to McDonough County about 1864, and here succeeded beyond all expectation in general farming and stock raising. His wife's father dying in 1879, the couple returned to the old Geer farm in Schuyler County where Mrs. Skiles was born, and to the entire possession of which Mr. Skiles succeeded by right of purchase soon after. This remained his home until 1905, and in its cultivation few men in the county have achieved more satisfactory general results. To-day he is the owner of 380 acres of as fine land as the county contains, having the best of modern improvements, and lying admirably adapted to all purposes of Central Western farming.

In political affiliation Mr. Skiles is a Democrat and, in addition to several other township offices, he has for many years been a member of the Board of Education. With his family he is a member and active worker in the Union Baptist Church. To him and his wife have been born six children, of whom Laura and Bertie died in infancy; Julius died at the age of twenty-one years and four days; Maggie is the wife of William Alembaugh, of Browning Township, and mother of Bert, Nellie and Beulah Alembaugh; Effie is the wife of Henry Trone, a farmer of Browning Township, and mother of nine children; Ellen is the wife of Miles Schlisler, and mother of Hattie Schlisler, and lives on one of her father's farms. Mr. Skiles may well regard his life as a success, both financially and personally, for in addition to substantial wealth he is one of the most honored and highly respected men in the community. No man is more emphatically the architect of his own fortunes, for all his possessions have come from his first pay, an old rifle, which then was the pride and hope of his life.

SKILES, William C.—The stern and substantial qualities which have inspired and accomplished successful pioneering in all places and stages of the world's progress, were manifest in the Skiles family at a very early period of the history of America, and ever since have spelled success and honor for the numerous members widely scattered over this broad continent and especially well represented in Schuyler County, to which the first arrival came in the middle 'twenties. Of the latter-day exponents of honorable and useful living, one of the best known and most successful is William C. Skiles, owner of a farm in Section 14, Browning Township, in which township he was born October 1, 1844, a son of Moses and Mary (Luttrell) Skiles, natives of Kentucky. Mr. Skiles' grandsires were soldiers in the Revolutionary War, the paternal grandfather coming to Schuyler County, Ill., from Missouri, the maternal grandparents arriving from the South. Both were with General Jackson at the battle of Horseshoe Bend, both practiced agriculture with excellent results in Schuyler County, and both lived to the ripe age of ninety years. The grandmother Luttrell was a remarkable woman, and attained the age of 102 years. During the early settlement of the county she had many thrilling experiences with the Indians. Her husband first settled in Browning Township, but later moved to the uplands, and the first yoke of oxen he used in the township was loaned him by the grandfather Skiles. His daughter, Mary Luttrell, was the second wife of Moses Skiles, and the mother of two sons and one daughter, of whom James Skiles is a retired farmer of Nebraska, and the daughter is the widow of Thomas Tracy, of Schuyler County. The first wife of Moses Skiles was formerly a Mrs. Swazey, whom he married in Missouri, and whose son, T. J. Skiles, now lives in Browning, Ill. The third Mrs. Skiles in girlhood was known as Melinda Lynch, who became the mother of five children: Verna, widow of James Mitchell of Browning; Rosa, widow of Martin Glover, of Astoria, Ill.; Moses is a farmer of Browning Township; Lewis died in Nebraska at the age of thirty years; David L., Charles C., and George, all three, deceased.

William C. Skiles' mother died when he was about seven months old, and he was then taken to the home of his maternal grandparents, with whom he remained until attaining his majority. His youth was filled with hard work and responsibility, but he managed to acquire a practical common school education, upon which he has built by the research of later years. In 1861 he was united in marriage with Margaret J. Price, a daughter of Permenius Price, a native of Tennessee, with whom he started housekeeping on the old Luttrell farm, where seven of their children were born to them, one being born before the breaking out of the war. Of these, William is a farmer of Littleton Township; Mary is the wife of L. Parker, of Browning Township, and has seven children: James I. is a farmer of Browning Township; Amanda (deceased) was the wife of John Stambaugh; Thomas is a farmer in Fulton County; Minnie is the wife of a farmer in Fulton County; and Ross is a resident of Peoria, Ill. The mother of this family died in 1875, and in 1889 Mr. Skiles married Mrs. Maria Perkins, born in Schuyler County, July 4, 1850, daughter of Elijah Wisdom, who came as a boy from Tennessee in 1827. Mr. Wisdom still is living with his daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Skiles, the only survivor of fourteen children, which his mother reared among the crudest of surroundings, never owning or using a cook stove, or any artificial light save a tallow dip. Mr. Wisdom has two children living, Mrs. Skiles and Fannie, wife of Charles Hendricks, of Quincy, III. He was a member of the Eighty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry during the Civil War. He is now eighty-four years old, his wife having died in 1871. Mrs. Skiles has been thrice married, her first husband being Allen Robertson, by whom she had four children; Curtis, of Browning Township; James, of Beardstown; William, of Browning Township; Carrie, wife of Ernest Skiles, of Browning Township. The father of Allen Robertson was a soldier in Company C, Third Missouri Cavalry, during the Civil War, and his death occurred in February, 1877. The second husband was H. P. Perkins, who was a soldier in the Third Illinois Cavalry, during the Civil War, and died in 1889, leaving one daughter, Wealthy, now deceased, who was wife of B. F. Lancaster. Mr. and Mrs. Skiles have a daughter, Fannie, now in school.

After his last marriage Mr. Skiles took charge of his farm of forty acres on Section 16 in Browning Township, where he has a comfortable home within half a mile of where he was born, and where he has been engaged in general farming and stock raising. He is a Democrat politically and has held a number of local offices, including that of member of the Board of Supervisors. Mr. Skiles is a man of firm character and excellent judgment, and well sustains the reputation for integrity and usefulness established in the dawn of the county's history by the sires on both sides of his family.

SLACK, Nathaniel G., M. D., (deceased).—A bright and beneficent career in the medical profession was terminated by the decease of the respected and well remembered physician above named, whose practice in Rushville, Schuyler County, Ill., extended over a period of nearly thirty years. That the memory of his faithful, considerate and self-denying attention to his numerous patients in Rushville and the surrounding country is still warmly cherished by its beneficiaries, is grateful evidence of his fidelity to the implicit trust reposed in him and to the high ideals which dominated his professional career. The subject of this memoir was born in England, April 9, 1830, his father, John Slack, also being a native of that country, where he spent his entire life. Some time after the death of John Slack, his widow married again, and coming to the United States, settled in Illinois, where she and her husband made their home in Fulton County. The latter, whose name was Potts, died a few years after their arrival in this country. Nathaniel G. Slack was a mere lad when his father died, and was only approximating manhood when he accompanied his elder brother to the United States. He first located in Rhode Island, whence after a time, he proceeded to Illinois, and took up his abode in Fulton County. There he shortly afterward became a pupil in the academy at Farmington, and after remaining for a time in that institution, pursued a course of study at Cedar Rapids, Iowa. He next taught school for several terms, and subsequently studied dentistry, in the practice of which he engaged. This he abandoned in order to attend the lectures of the Iowa Medical College at Keokuk, Iowa, and then commenced the practice of medicine at his home in Fulton County. In 1859 he removed to Rushville, where he continued in practice, and soon attained general recognition as a skillful and successful physician and surgeon. This professional standing he maintained for many years, acquiring an extensive and remunerative practice. He was also identified with mercantile pursuits, being interested to a considerable extent in the woolen mills at Rushville. His death occurred August 9, 1887.

On November 12, 1858, Dr. Slack was united in marriage with Eliza C. Berry, who was born in Fulton County, Ill., a daughter of Henry C. Berry, a native of Berkshire, England. Mr. Berry came to America with his family in early days, settling in Canada. Thence he moved to Fulton County, Ill., about the year 1839. By trade he was a miller, and alternately followed farming for a livelihood. In Fulton County he was engaged in mercantile pursuits. During the latter part of his life he went to California, where he died. Mrs. Slack is still a resident of Rushville, where she is surrounded by every comfort, and enjoys the cordial esteem of numerous friends.

In politics, Dr. Slack was a supporter of the Republican party. During the Civil War, he acted in the capacity of United States Marshal. Aside from his professional attainments and services, his memory is cherished as that of one of the patriotic, public spirited and useful citizens of Rushville.

SMITH, Joseph H.—To none of the old settlers of Schuyler County do the changes which have taken place during the past fifty-nine years seem more marvelous than to Joseph H. Smith, a retired farmer of Rushville. Mr. Smith has watched the passing of the round log house; the subscription school; the dense hazel brush; the hungry and inquisitive foxes which made life miserable for everyone but themselves; the gentle deer, of which he saw eleven in one herd; the wild turkeys and other small game; the scythe, cradle, flint light and tallow dip. From the other edge of his life he still watches with interest the coming and going of the present generation of workers, those to whom have been shifted the burdens of agriculture, but everywhere upon his own place are the evidences of his handiwork, of his untiring perseverance through the storm and sunshine of his long life. Mr. Smith has had his own way to make in the world ever since he was old enough to make his labor of value. Born on a farm in Jefferson County, Ind., February 14, 1833, he is a son of Michael Smith, a native of Somerset County, Md., and grandson of William Smith, also born in Maryland. Besides himself, but two others of his father's children are living, namely: Oliver P. Smith, of the State of Washington, and William N. Smith, a resident of Mount Vernon, Ill. Melinda (Reamer) Smith, mother of Joseph H., was born in New Jersey, a daughter of David and Nancy (Smith) Reamer, natives of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, respectively. David Reamer was a gunsmith by trade, and he followed the martial fortunes of Washington for seven years of the Revolutionary War, stacking his musket on the battlefields of Bunker Hill and Brandywine, and enduring the bitterly cold winter at Valley Forge. Mr. Smith now holds as his most prized relic the pocket-book which his maternal grandfather carried through the Revolutionary War. The Reamer family is long lived, Melinda (Reamer) Smith having lived to the unusual age of ninety years, her death occurring in 1900.

Michael Smith moved from Indiana to Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County, in 1848, and engaged in farming and stock raising until his death in 1852. Joseph H. had the best advantages procurable in his township, but even these were meagre compared with those the children of the present day enjoy. He was a sturdy and industrious lad, and being left fatherless at the age of nineteen, a large share of the home responsibilities fell upon his shoulders. The following year, in 1853, he was united in marriage to Sarah Jane Icenogle, a native of Boone County, Ky., who came with her parents to Schuyler County in 1849, she being then thirteen years old. Surviving her parents and the other children in the family beside herself are: Thomas H. Icenogle, of Beardstown, Ill., and Mrs. Melvina F. M. Hodges, of Rushville. Mr. Smith has voted the Democratic ticket ever since old enough to form political opinions, and he served four years as Constable of Bainbridge Township and sixteen years as Road Commissioner. Both Mr. and Mrs. Smith are devout members of the Baptist Church, which she joined about fifty-five years ago. To his first purchase of forty acres of land, Mr. Smith has added until he now owns 160 acres, all under cultivation. His farm has many fine improvements, excellent machinery, and substantial facilities for caring for products and stock.

SMITH, S. Darwin, M. D.—A comparatively recent recruit to professional circles in Rushville is Dr. S. Darwin Smith, one of the young and enthusiastic practitioners who recognize the ever widening possibilities of their calling, and whose judgment and research is untrammelled by mental fixity or blind devotion to the tenets of the past. Dr. Smith was born in Woodstock Township, Schuyler County, Ill., December 30, 1870, of Southern ancestry, his father, S. S. Smith, having been born in Brown County, Ill., of which his paternal grandparents, Abraham and Mary E. (Hendly) Smith, natives respectively of Lexington, Ky., and Virginia, were early settlers. His mother, formerly Lizzie (Cook) Magruder, was born in Schuyler County, Ill., a daughter of T. P. W. and L. M. (Bennett) Magruder, the former born in Baltimore, Md., and the latter in Shepherdstown, Va.

Dr. Smith's original field of activity was upon his father's farm in Woodstock Township. He received a practical common school education while still at home, and finally entered the Chicago Homeopathic Medical College, from which he was graduated in the class of March, 1896. Through successful competitive examination he secured a year of training as an interne in the same hospital, and for the following five years conducted a general practice in Astoria, Ill., coming to Rushville in the fall of 1902. He already has made many friends and built up a practice extending over a large area of the town and surrounding country, and by his faithfulness, skill, and ready adaptation to the demands and amenities of his calling, gives promise of extended usefulness in an appreciative community.

Dr. Smith renounced bachelorhood March 1, 1898, marrying Anna Reed Freer, a native of Chicago, Ill., and of their union there is a son, Edward Magruder Smith. The doctor is a Republican in politics, and fraternally is connected with the Knights of Pythias, Modern Woodmen of America and the Court of Honor.

SNYDER, Madison O. (deceased), for many years a leading farmer of Littleton Township, Schuyler County, Ill., and later engaged in real estate and fire insurance business in the town of Littleton, Ill., where he also held the office of Postmaster, was born in Schuyler County, Ill., July 31, 1840, a son of David and Cassandra (Walker) Snyder, natives of Virginia and Kentucky, respectively, the birthplace of his father being in Breckenridge County, in the former State. Their marriage took place in Virginia in 1822, and two years later, they moved with teams to Illinois, locating in the vicinity of Rushville. A few years later, David Snyder entered land in Sections 9 and 16, Rushville Township, where in course of time, he became the owner of 280 acres. The ground in this locality was so swampy and boggy when he first located there as to be of very slight value. David Snyder died on his farm March 5, 1858, his widow surviving him until June 6, 1869, when she also departed this life. Their family consisted of five daughters and five sons, of whom only one son, William F. Snyder, of La Crosse, Hancock County, Ill., is now living. A daughter, Mrs. Julia Wheat, of Littleton, Schuyler County, recently passed away.

Madison O. Snyder received his education in the district schools, and remained with his mother until a year after his marriage, when he moved to a farm four miles south of Littleton, on which he lived until 1869. In that year he bought 120 acres in Section 10, Littleton Township, which he partly improved, and successfully followed farming there for seventeen years. In 1897, he took up his residence in the town of Littleton, buying a house and lot and the postoffice building, thereafter devoting his attention to the fire insurance and real estate business, in which he continued up to the time of decease, October 21, 1907.

The marriage of Mr. Snyder took place November 13, 1861, on which date Mary J. Lambert became his wife. Mrs. Snyder was born in Rushville, Ill., December 18, 1841, a daughter of William and Catherine (Dennis) Lambert, natives of Kentucky. Her father was a minister of the Christian Church and an early settler in Schuyler County. Seven children born of this union were: Catherine L., who married Samuel Frank Sloan, and now lives at Watertown, S. D.; Nellie, who married Oel D. Ross, of La Prairie, Hancock County, Ill.; Olive, who is employed as a clerk in Macomb, Ill.; Grace (Mrs. Hosea B. Winters), of Littleton Township; Elnora W., wife of Charles D. Wells, a resident of Littleton, Ill.; Clarence O., a farmer of Littleton Township, and Nina Florence, who is still at home.

Politically, Mr. Snyder was a Republican and bore a prominent and influential part in local affairs. He held the office of Township Assessor, five years; that of Collector, one year; and served eight years as Justice of the Peace. He was appointed Postmaster of Littleton by President McKinley, assuming the duties of that office February 14, 1898, which he continued to occupy up to the date of his death. He also held the office of Notary Public under the administration of Gov. Tanner and Gov. Yates. In fraternal circles, Mr. Snyder was identified with the A. F. & A. M., having belonged to the Rushville Lodge from 1864 to 1884, when he assisted in organizing a lodge in Littleton, Ill. He was also a member of the M. W. of A. The religious connection of Mr. Snyder was with the Baptist Church, of which he had been a member since 1865, and in which he had officiated as deacon and trustee from 1875 up to the time of his demise. Mr. Snyder was one of the foremost citizens of the county where his entire life had been spent, and no members of the community were held in higher esteem than he and his worthy wife, who survives him.

STEELE, George Burton.—A comparatively recent and well equipped recruit to the professional life of Rushville is George Burton Steele, a young man of well defined purpose, and sufficient energy and patience to accomplish much as a legal practitioner. Born on a farm one and a half miles northeast of Pleasantview, Schuyler County, Ill., December 10, 1878, Mr. Steele is descended on both sides of his family from very early settlers of Ohio, in which State were born his paternal grandparents, Theodosius S. and Mary (McEwen) Steele, whose agricultural interests were identified with the vicinity of Rushville. On this farm of their own clearing was born James M. Steele, father of George Burton, who grew to manhood and married Rachel Strong, a native of Pleasantview and daughter of George W. and Frances (Quinn) Strong, the former born in Columbiana, Ohio, and the latter a native of Louisville, Ky. George Lee Strong, the American progenitor of the Strong family in America, was born in Ireland, and after settling in Virginia, married Nancy Kennedy, a native of Louisville, Ky. Thomas Quinn strong, great-grandfather of George Burton, and son of the immigrant, was born in Virginia, and after moving to Ohio married Elizabeth Lewis, one of the Buckeye State's native daughters.

After the death of his mother, when he was seven years old, George Burton Steele lived until his majority with his grandmother, Frances Strong, and his uncle, Charles K. Strong. While achieving his preliminary education principally through study at home, he graduated from the Pleasantview High School, Kennedy's Normal at Rushville, and the Rushville Business College.

At the age of eighteen he entered upon his six year's of educational work, and during that time gained an enviable reputation as a practical and capable teacher. He then was appointed Deputy County Treasurer, under his uncle, Charles K. Strong, and while discharging the duties of this office read law under Thomas E. Bottenburg, of Rushville. Admitted to the bar of Illinois, April 6, 1905, he began the practice of his profession in Rushville September 1, 1905, and during the ensuing year has had no occasion to regret his choice of location.

December 25, 1901, Mr. Steele was united in marriage to Bertha B. Bestler, a native of Naperville, Ill. Mr. Steele is a Democrat in politics, and fraternally is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America. Mr. Steele is at present City Attorney for the city of Rushville, Ill.

STOVER, Samuel.—For more than sixty-three years the Stover family of Bainbridge Township has been a strong and continuous factor in the best progress of Schuyler County; for its members have been concerned not only with the material phase of its history, but with the development of its educational system, which tends to the production of the higher wealth of mind, and which is so closely related to the substantial prosperity of any community. Education is a stimulant to broad action and has an ennobling influence on all the labors of the world, so that both Samuel Stover, the pioneer in agricultural work and civic organization, and D. Marion Stover, his son, who has accomplished so much for the school system of the county, are entitled to no small share of the credit of establishing social order and elevating the standard of their home communities.

The late Samuel Stover was a Virginian, born in Page County, that State, on the 8th of November, 1813, and his father, also born in the Old Dominion, was of German ancestry. In 1816 the family moved to the southern part of Licking County, Ohio, where the grandfather (also Samuel) engaged in farming and there passed his last years. There Samuel Stover, Jr., married Maria Campbell, a daughter of Peter L. Campbell, their union occurring in the fall of 1843. The Campbells moved to Schuyler County, Ill., and settled on what is now Section 4, Bainbridge Township. The father was an active Democrat, was elected County Treasurer and assessed the entire county before it was organized into townships, finally dying on the old farm. In the spring of 1844 Samuel Stover, with his wife and one child, Milton L. Stover, settled in the same section, the improvements on the farm of 160 acres, consisting of a rude double log cabin. The land was very heavily timbered, and the father immediately commenced to cut down and burn the large logs. One hundred and twenty acres was finally cleared and reclaimed to the uses of agriculture, and the farm is today one of the finest in the township, in 1906 producing eighty-seven bushels of corn to the acre. The old log cabin remained the family home until 1858, and here most of the thirteen children were born; but in the year mentioned Samuel Stover erected with his own hands a fine residence near the modest house of the pioneer period. There the mother died September 29, 1874, a devout woman reared in the faith of the Primitive Baptist Church, whose life was in strict accord with the principles of her belief. Three of her thirteen children died in infancy. After his second marriage to Mrs. Elizabeth Rouse, Mr. Stover retired from the old farm to Rushville, where he resided until his death, August 8, 1898, and where his widow passed away March 14, 1904.

Samuel Stover was long one of the prominent citizens of Bainbridge Township, taking an especial interest in the early educational affairs. He was a Democrat, filled various township offices of trust, and, like his father-in-law, Mr. Campbell, was in many ways prominently concerned in the founding of the county government. He was a faithful, enterprising, large minded and warm hearted man, a good husband and father, and a strong citizen. His religious belief, to which he was closely attached, was that of the Primitive Baptist Church.

The children of the family who survived their infancy are as follows: Milton L., who is farming in Johnson County, Neb.; Oscar A., a resident of Rushville, Schuyler County; Thomas C., who died at the age of fourteen years; D. Marion, a sketch of whose life follows; Horatio H., now deceased; Horace F., a resident of Lincoln, Neb.; Dora I., who married W. R. Hoskins, now living in Wolsey, S. Dak.; Rollin M., and Robert C., both residents of Rushville, Ill.; and Zelma E., a school teacher of Minneapolis, Minn.

D. Marion Stover was born in the old log cabin of the family homestead in Section 4, Bainbridge Township, on the 27th of October, 1848, and is now the owner of the home place of 160 acres, which is well improved and under a high state of cultivation. After receiving an education in the district schools and the Gem City Business College, of Quincy, Ill., he devoted the larger portion of his life to self-improvement and the instruction of others. While fitting himself for his profession he assisted his father upon the farm, and in 1872 began teaching in the district schools of Schuyler County, continuing this work until 1886. His executive ability and modern methods, with his popular personal qualities, so established his reputation as an educator and gained him so secure a footing with the public, that he was nominated by the Democracy as a candidate for County Superintendent of Schools. His strength is shown in the fact that he was elected by a greater majority than anyone else on the ticket, and was also returned for a second term of four years. During the eight years of his service in this important office, from 1886 to 1894, the schools of the county were managed with decision and ability, the valuable reforms which were made being dictated by a common-sense determination to give pupils the training which they could utilize, rather than the ambition to be thought radical or unique. The result was that the schools were brought to a high degree of practical efficiency and that he introduced a course of study similar to the one now used in every county in the State. Mr. Stover was not a candidate for re-election, and has since taken no active part in politics. For the past four years he has served as principal of the school of Frederick, and was re-elected for the term of 1907-08.

In 1898 Mr. Stover bought the old home farm, and under his management it has been made a most productive and desirable piece of country property. Here in company with his sister, Zelma E., he spends his summer vacations, and devotes the balance of the year to the educational field, to which he is so ardently attached and in which he has earned such eminence.

STRONG, Charles Kennedy, the present Treasurer of Schuyler County, was born on the farm he since has occupied near Pleasantview, June 15, 1857. This farm is one of the landmarks of the township, and under the management of two generations of the family it has taken on both financial and home-making value. Settled upon at an early day by George W. and Frances (Quinn) Strong, parents of Charles Kennedy, it has been added to as prosperity favored its industrious owners, and now consists of 160 acres. George Strong was a native of Columbiana County, Ohio, while his wife was born in Louisville, Ky., a daughter of Thomas and Nancy (Kennedy) Quinn, natives of Virginia and Kentucky, respectively. George Strong, father of George W., was born in Ireland, and was the only member of his family to emigrate to America.

As an occupation, Charles Kennedy Strong has always followed farming, and has achieved success in his chosen calling, being engaged in both general farming and stock raising. At a comparatively early age he began to take an active interest in politics, and has held many offices within the gift of his fellow Democrats. On two occasions he served as Assessor of Bainbridge Township, and was also Supervisor of the same township for two terms, serving as Chairman of the Board, and having charge, as one of the committeemen, of the erection of the present county jail. He was elected County Treasurer in 1902, and his conduct of the financial affairs of the county has met with general satisfaction.

August 28, 1887, Mr. Strong married Adelaine Corman, who was born in Rushville Township, and educated at Christian Neck School. Mr. and Mrs. Strong are the parents of four children: Homer W., Rachel M., George W., and Frank C. Mr. Strong is fraternally connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America. In religion he is a Methodist. In a community where his entire life has been passed, where his face is familiar to almost every resident, and where he has been called upon to fill positions which test character and involve sacrifice for the public good, this prominent farmer and politician has the reputation of being a square and reliable man, and one in whom the community may implicitly place reliance.

STRONG, Moro S.—Of the men who are helping to maintain a high standard of farming and stock raising in Rushville Township, credit is due Moro S. Strong, whose constant research and painstaking efforts have resulted in the ownership of one of the valuable and paying properties in his neighborhood. Born in Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County, January 3, 1863, he was educated in the public schools of Pleasantview, and on his father's farm received practical training in the occupation to which he is devoting his life. His parents, George W. and Francis (Quinn) Strong, were born in Columbiana County, Ohio, and Louisville, Ky., respectively, the former July 6, 1822, and the latter July 28, 1829. Both the paternal and maternal families had to do with the pioneer history of Schuyler County, and the mother, at the time of her death, had lived here sixty-four years. The father died October 4, 1869.

Moro S. Strong married Laura Furness, also a native of Schuyler County, and of their union there were two children: Jesse D., deceased, and Anthony V., a farmer of Rushville Township. Mrs. Strong died in 1887, and for his second wife Mr. Strong married Mary Gossage, daughter of William and Nancy Gossage, and of this union there are two sons: Charles M. and Giles H. Mr. Strong owns 140 acres of land in Section 25, Rushville Township, a large part of which is under a high degree of cultivation. This formerly was known as the Quinn farm, and was settled by Mr. Strong's maternal grandfather, in 1842. It came into Mr. Strong's possession in 1887, and he moved on to it two years later, finding there a small frame dwelling, which since has been replaced by a modern farm house. He has been engaged in general farming and stock raising continuously, and in 1903 began the extensive breeding of Hereford cattle, of which he now has a fine herd of registered stock. Underlying the farm is a five foot vein of coal, and he has opened up a mine with a capacity of from two hundred and fifty to three hundred bushels per day of as fine coal as can be found in the State of Illinois.

With his farming Mr. Strong combined an interest in the general welfare of the community, and though emphatically opposed to office holding, has staunchly supported the Democratic party and has lent practical assistance to the political aspirations of his friends. Fraternally he is popular and much in demand, and is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America.

STRONG, Peter.—The retirement of Peter Strong to his pleasant home in the village of Browning in 1904 was justified by many years of successful activity as a general farmer and stockraiser, and by an example of character and kindness which should be an inspiration to the youth seeking the material and moral compensations of a country life. During the fifty-seven years of his life Mr. Strong has known no other home than Schuyler County, where he was born in Bainbridge Township January 26, 1851, and where, on the farm of his parents, Stephen and Elizabeth (Brines) Strong, he was reared to the arduous work in which he for so many years engaged.

Stephen Strong was born in Ohio, and as a lad came with his parents to Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County, where he engaged in farming until his death in 1899. His wife, formerly Elizabeth Brines, was born in Illinois, and died in 1894. She was the mother of three children, both younger than Peter, of whom Lewis lives on the farm in Browning Township; Laura died at the age of six years. In 1860 the family moved from Bainbridge to Section 29, Browning Township, finding here a dilapidated and altogether discouraging property, as far as general improvements were concerned, the greater part of the land being covered with timber or underbrush. Mr. Strong lived to see his industry bear fruit and his home transformed into one of the best places in the county. He was essentially a home-loving man, of quiet and unambitious tastes and a generous contributor to churches and charitable organizations. He had no political aspirations and never was willing to accept political honors.

Peter Strong was nine years old when he came to Browning Township, and though by no means a robust lad, he at once undertook the hard work of cutting down trees and clearing away brush, and eventually, long before his father's death, succeeded to the entire management of the place. Both father and son made a specialty of high grade stock, and in the hands of the son, since his purchase of the place after the death of his parents, this paying resource has been greatly increased. He has an average herd of thirty Short-horn cattle, fully half of which are registered, and also raises fine horses and hogs. His farm is equipped with ample facilities for caring for stock in increasing numbers, and he also has storage for grains and general produce, besides an excellent dwelling and well kept fences, drainage and fine water supply. The oversight of this beautiful farm Mr. Strong relinquished upon moving to Browning in 1904, but it unquestionably still fills a large place in his heart and life, representing, as it does, a commendable and altogether worthy dream and its fulfillment. Its 260 acres represent what a man may accomplish who sets out to carve his way unaided along agricultural lines, and who allows neither discouragement nor occasional failure to interfere with the steadiness of his action and purpose. Mr. Strong is a Democrat in politics, but has never aspired to a place among the office holders of the township.

STRONG, Thomas Q., recognized by all who know him as one of the leading farmers of Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County, Ill., and one of the most prominent and influential citizens of his locality, was born on the home farm where his brother Charles K. Strong, now lives, February 1, 1847. He is a son of George W. and Frances Strong, natives of Ohio and Kentucky. Early in the 'forties his father came from Ohio and settled on the farm, in Section 1, Bainbridge Township, which was the birthplace of all his children. Thomas Q. Strong received his education in the Pleasantview school, and assisted his father in the work of the place, remaining at home until he reached the age of twenty-one years. Then he rented land from his grandmother, and started out for himself. When his father's health began to fail, Thomas was induced to return home, and after the death of the former, the son assumed management of the homestead property which he continued for two years. In 1883, he purchased eighty acres in Section 15 of the same township, to which he moved during that year, occupying a log cabin of one room. For ten years this was the home of Mr. and Mrs. Strong, and in it two of their children were born. In 1893, Mr. Strong built a new, five-room dwelling, and now has one of the comfortable residences in the township. He has added ninety-one acres to his original purchase, and is the owner of 171 acres lying in Sections 10 and 15, Bainbridge Township. When he took possession, the land had been partially cleared, and he applied himself to the task of completing the clearing and preparing fifty acres for cultivation, ultimately developing the tract into a highly productive farm. He has been a persevering, diligent and thorough-going farmer, having done his full share to promote the agricultural interests of Schuyler County, and has been closely identified with its growth and welfare. Too busy to travel and deeply absorbed in local interests, he has only once passed beyond the boundaries of his native State in a lifetime extending over three-score years.

On February 7, 1873 Mr. Strong was united in marriage with Augusta Crozier, who was born in New York October 9, 1851, a daughter of Richard Crozier, a narrative of whose life appears in another part of this work. The children resulting from this union are: Eva, wife of Watson Dodds, detailed mention of whom is also made in this volume; Stella, who died in infancy; and Anna, who was married to George W. Ward, September 11, 1906. Mr. Ward, who has charge of Mr. Strong's farm, is a son of Jackson Ward, a biographical record of whom may be found on another page herein.

Politically, Mr. Strong is identified with the Democratic party. He has rendered able and faithful public service in various township offices, having been Collector, Road Commissioner and School Trustee for twelve years. When he was elected to the last mentioned office the financial condition of the schools was not encouraging, but during his incumbency it was placed on a sound basis. His colleagues on the School Board were W. H. Reeve and Vincent Bellamy. Mr. and Mrs. Strong are earnest and active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and have long taken a deep interest in church and educational work. For twenty years, he was Superintendent of the Mt. Carmel Sunday school. Both husband and wife enjoy the sincere respect and cordial regard of a wide circle of friends.

STUMM, Jeremiah, who served as County Surveyor of Schuyler County, for nearly forty years, was born April 13, 1827, in Springhill Township, Fayette County, Pa. He was a son of Philip and Rebecca Burchinal Stumm and resided with his parents until his eighteenth year, when he left home to learn the carpenter's trade.

From 1845 to 1857 he worked at his trade and was employed as superintendent on several large contracts. In January, 1857, Mr. Stumm came to Rushville from Peoria, Ill., and took the contract to build the new county jail, which is now, after an existence of fifty years, in a good state of preservation and used as a city calaboose. This contract kept Mr. Stumm employed until August, 1858, and, while the county got a good piece of work, Mr. Stumm was a loser of $900 on his contract.

In 1863 Mr. Stumm was elected County Surveyor, serving two years. From 1867 to 1875 he was Deputy Surveyor under Surveyor James W. Watts, and did practically all the surveying in and about Rushville during these years. In 1885 he was appointed to fill the unexpired term of W. J. Horney and served as County Surveyor until 1904.

During the time he was Surveyor Mr. Stumm made his home at the court house, and when he became feeble from age, went to the county farm to live. He made his home here from the spring of 1905 until his death, which occurred May 5, 1908. His remains were taken to the old home at Ada, Ohio, for interment.

"Jerry" Stumm, as he was familiarly known to almost every resident of the county, was a man of more than ordinary intellectual ability, and had he been inclined to follow the pursuits for which he was so ably fitted, he would have made his mark in the business world. But financial reverses in his younger years apparently broke his spirit, and he took a pessimistic view of life that made impotent his marked ability. But although he gave up the struggle in the keen competition of a business career, his mind was bright and vigorous, and his memory was a most remarkable one, even up to the time of his death.

Since his death the County Board of Supervisors has purchased his old compass and chain, and they will be preserved in a case at the court house as a relic for future generations.

SUTHERLAND, H. Ralph.—The seeker after success along farming lines may learn much from the life efforts of H. Ralph Sutherland, whose home, character and ideals place him among the most progressive and substantial of the upbuilders of Brooklyn Township and Schuyler County. As much as any of whom we have knowledge, Mr. Sutherland is entitled to the credit of being a self-made man, a man who has carved his way practically unaided, and to whom the storm and stress and discouragement of life never has offered sufficient incentive for skirking of duty or a substitution of profitless pleasures. He is a worker who loves his work as he does his fellow men, who ever has looked forward to the tasks of a new day with hope and gladness, and at night has been willing to acknowledge his debt to the merciful boon of labor.

On March 4, 1845—the inauguration day of President James K. Polk,—Mr. Sutherland was born in Sunbury, Ohio, and was but three years old when occurred the death of his father, Joseph Sutherland, who was born in Trumbull County, Ohio, and who for many years was employed by the Hopkins Soda & Bottling Works, of Sunbury. The elder Sutherland was a man of quiet and refined tastes, a good citizen, kind husband and father, and an earnest voter of the Whig ticket. His wife, formerly Jane Eaton, also a native of Ohio, subsequently married a Mr. Henry Schoonover, with whom and her son, H. Ralph, she left Ohio in 1858, stopping for a time in Vermont, Fulton County, Ill., but during the following year locating in Brooklyn Township, Schuyler County. In the spring of 1861 the family rented land from a Mr. Fisher, the next December moving to rented land east of Littleton, in the township of that name. He soon afterward moved to his grandfather's farm, and on May 1, 1865, located on the farm which Mr. Sutherland now owns. Here the step-father died in 1866, and here has dwelt Mr. Sutherland with his beloved mother, one of the most vivacious and interesting young old ladies in the county. By her second marriage she had two children, both of whom died in infancy. At the age of eighty-five she enjoys excellent health, and is the joy of the household because of her kindly disposition and freedom from the traits usually associated with one of her years.

H. Ralph Sutherland was thirteen years of age when he came with his mother and step-father to Schuyler County, and soon after found employment as a clerk in the general store of his uncle, J. H. Dexter, at Augusta, Ill. Owing to ill health brought on by confinement in 1862 he quit the store and began to work in a wagon shop in Astoria, but was not long permitted to follow this occupation as the illness of his step-father compelled his return to the farm, of which he then took charge. The place at that time contained 140 acres, with a log cabin and a log stable, but without fences to confine stock or keep out that of other settlers. Over a large part of the land waved wild prairie grass, while but thirty-five acres had been broken by the plow, and there were fifteen acres of heavy timber. Mr. Sutherland started in bravely to clear away the thick underbrush, and in time succeeded in making the place one of the most valuable and profitable in Brooklyn Township. He has been the personification of industry and the setting sun often has found him with a large amount of work yet to accomplish. He never has shirked or slighted his tasks, and his place bears the stamp of this conscientious and painstaking devotion to details. He has added eighty acres to the original farm and now owns 220 acres.

On October 8, 1878, Mr. Sutherland was united in marriage to Miss E. A. Pratt, the wedding taking place in Johnston, Licking County, Ohio, the native place of the bride. Mrs. Sutherland is a daughter of Hector and Susan Ellen (Reed) Pratt, the former an extensive farmer of Licking County, and the parent of eight children, six of whom are living: Joseph Pratt, of Marengo, Ohio; Oscar, owner of the old home farm near Johnston, Ohio; Mrs. Sutherland; Mary, wife of Harris Pick, of Johnston; Maggie, deceased wife of Dr. Garnett; Lucy, wife of Dudley Taylor; and Lizzie, married and living in Racine, Wis. The oldest child, a son, died at the age of seven years. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Sutherland, of whom Twilla D. died at the age of eight years and eight months, taking with her into the unknown much of the joy and gladness of a home which she had brightened inexpressibly with her sweetness of disposition and gentleness of heart. The only son in the family, Glenn C., born August 30, 1889, was educated in the common schools of Brooklyn, and in the Commercial Department of the Knoxville Normal, and is a young man of exceptional promise. He has his father's dignity and uprightness of character, and is much esteemed for his quiet and unobtrusive manners.

In political affiliation Mr. Sutherland is a Democrat, but has never been weaned from his home and immediate duties sufficiently to accept of local official honors. His farm and its development have furnished the great and absorbing purpose of his life, and, as in the past, it furnished many obstacles and many conflicts, today it is his pride and joy, the evidence of his industry and faithfulness, of his thrift and far-sightedness during a whole half century in the same township.

SWEENEY, John L.—The long and prominent identification of the Sweeney family with Schuyler County dates from the arrival in 1851 of Doctors Jesse and Minerva (Sanders) Sweeney, who were natives of Kentucky, and born in Casey and Wayne Counties, respectively. Dr. Jesse Sweeney's useful life began in 1800, his parents having settled in Casey County some years previous. He was reared on a farm, whose opportunities he outgrew comparatively early in life, and a broader field presented itself in the medical profession, for which he prepared at the well known University at Lexington, Ky. He was successful as a physician and surgeon in his native State, and after locating in Rushville in 1851 realized no cessation of his professional popularity, his services being in demand throughout a large part of the surrounding country. His life ending in 1863, he was survived by his wife until 1887, and she in turn is survived by four of her ten children: M. C., of Rushville; Charles H., a resident of Des Moines, Iowa; Elizabeth E., wife of J. W. Jones, of Peoria, Ill.; and John L. Doctor Sweeney in early life was a staunch supporter of the Whig party, and after its establishment in 1856, he was equally devoted to the infant Republican party. A man of large heart and great generosity of judgment, he filled an important need in the world, and left it better for his earnest devotion to the best tenets of his splendid profession.

The Civil War proved the first break in the monotony of the youth of John L. Sweeney, he having thus far devoted his energies to the home, and to irregular attendance at the district school. In August, 1862, at the age of nineteen years, he enlisted in Company B, One Hundred and Nineteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for three years, serving with his regiment through all of its long marches and hard fought battles, and at the expiration of his enlistment in 1865, receiving an honorable discharge. Returning to Rushville after the war, he entered upon his mercantile experience as a clerk for the firm of Thomas Wilson & Company, established in 1837, and in that capacity mastered every detail of merchandising as practiced by that oldest of enterprises in the city. In 1882 he had saved sufficient money to purchase an interest in the firm, and the same year witnessed a material change in the business, a fire having swept the south side of the square, and demolished the frame building in which the firm for so many years had conducted their business. In this emergency the present brick structure was erected, two stories in height, and with a warehouse of 200 square feet running back of the main structure. This store is one of the best equipped and best arranged dry-goods establishments in Schuyler County, and the high standard of merchandising of the original owner has never been allowed to diminish. In 1888, Hiram Graff became a partner, and the business was thus conducted until 1897, when Mr. Graff retired, and fresh blood and energy was infused into the time-honored concern by the entrance into the firm of Thomas W. Sweeney, son of John L., and grandson of the original founder, Mr. Wilson. With this combination of talent and enthusiasm, father and son have produced a thoroughly modern store, introducing many features which indicate the greatest known mercantile progressiveness, and placing themselves in touch with the most modern of needs and requirements. Special mention is due the dry-goods and shoe departments, although other lines are selected with equal regard for completeness and satisfactoriness. An effort is made to please all without regard to company losses, and courtesy and consideration are recognized as indispensable factors of success.

February 20, 1867, Mr. Sweeney was united in marriage to Amelia L. Wilson, daughter of the old time merchant, and founder of the Thomas Wilson & Company. To Mr. and Mrs. Sweeney have been born the following children: Eleanor, wife of Charles W. Graff, and mother of Thomas, Eleanor, Mildred, Francis and John L. Graff; Jessie, wife of H. B. Fisher, Superintendent of Public Instruction at Geneseo, Ill., and mother of Mary L., Linda and William C. Fisher; Thomas W., who married Maud R. Rottger, of Jacksonville, Ill.; Frank R., manager of the Hotel Schuyler, of Rushville, and Susan S., wife of Charles Arthur Griffith, of The Griffith Hardware Company, Rushville, Ill. Mr. Sweeney has shown his faith in the future of Rushville by investing heavily in local property, and is half-owner of the Hotel Schuyler, one of the best hostelrys in this part of the county; is also a large stock-holder and director in the Schuyler County Bank. For the term of his voting life he has staunchly supported the Republican party, and though himself not a member of any church, has donated liberally to local church interests, especially the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which his wife is a devoted member. Personally Mr. Sweeney is a plain, matter of fact gentleman, owing to no prevailing weaknesses such as smoking, chewing, swearing or speculating, and leading a life of singular moderation and peacefulness. No man in the community is held in higher esteem, nor would any be sooner trusted with affairs involving integrity and public spirit.

SWEENEY, Thomas W.—The general store of Wilson & Company is an unbroken link between the Rushville of 1839 and that of 1907. For seventy years this enterprise has stood guard over the commercial destiny of the community, has accurately and unfailingly reflected its growth, and has stood sponsor for its reputation beyond the borders of its immediate activity. No more striking contrast in business methods and opportunities exists than that presented by the establisher, Thomas Wilson, and his grandson, Thomas W. Sweeney, the present manager of the store. The former struck the sober business gait of the far frontier, and the latter, without changing the base of operations, finds himself the center of a feverish competition, enjoying the profit and influence of a commercial prince endowed with the strong and dependable qualities which bespeak thorough harmony with the needs, possibilities and splendid usefulness of the twentieth century.

Thomas W. Sweeney was born at Galva, Henry County, Ill., October 2, 1875, and in 1881 came to Rushville with his father, John L. Sweeney, where he attended the public schools and graduated from the high school in the class of 1893. Ambitious of a higher education, the young man in 1894 entered the department of liberal arts connected with the Northwestern University, at Evanston, Ill., and in 1895 returned to Rushville and entered the employ of Wilson & Company, general merchants. Mr. Sweeney continued a clerk in this patriarchal enterprise until 1897, in the meantime applying himself to learning every detail of the business with the zeal, forethought and sagacity required of the man who would engage in successful merchandising. At the expiration of two years his faithfulness was rewarded by his appointment as manager of the store, a position which he ever since has maintained with commendable dignity and ability. He carries a stock of dry-goods and shoes, observes the greatest possible neatness and order in the distribution and arrangement of his goods, and insists upon courtesy and consideration upon the part of his employees. Some of his patrons have purchased commodities since a very early period in the history of the store, but those who knew it in its log cabin era mostly have been gathered to their rest. The same reliability and confidence characterize its general atmosphere as earned for it the patronage of the early settlers, but it has assumed the dignity of larger growth, and the influence of a manager who is variously and intimately connected with the upbuilding of the community.

Mr. Sweeney is promoting many phases of local business activity, and is Secretary and Manager of the Rushville Electric Light Company. For the past two years he has been President of the Rushville Business Men's Club, an organization established for the promotion of the best business methods and ethics, and which sets a high standard of requirements in its membership. He is interested also in agriculture, and is part owner of a farm of 600 acres in Schuyler County. Politically Mr. Sweeney is a Republican, but he has no official aspirations beyond the intelligent casting of his vote. To his credit is several months efficient government service during the Spanish-American war as Chief Clerk in the Commissary Department under Captain Orson Pettijohn, Third Brigade, Second Division, Second Army Corps, at Camp Alger, Washington, D. C. This position Mr. Sweeney held from July, 1898, until the following December, he having previously enlisted under Col. George Rankin, whose company was never requisitioned for active service. Mr. Sweeney is active in fraternal circles, being a member of Blue Lodge No. 9, A. F. & A. M., the Chapter, Commandery, and Knights of Pythias, while his wife is a member of the Eastern Star. Mrs. Sweeney formerly was Maud H. Rottger, daughter of John and Anna Rottger, and born in Jacksonville, Ill., in November, 1876. The marriage of Mr. Sweeney and Miss Rottger occurred June 1, 1899, and the couple occupy a shade embowered home on one of the pleasant streets of the town, and are regarded as among the best informed and most progressive of the latter day generation of citizens. Mr. Sweeney is the ideal of the progressive, forceful and influential merchant, and possesses in large measure those qualities of thrift, initiative and resource which bring a man into closest touch with the best and most substantial of community interests.

SWISHER, Solomon C.—In his long and still active life Solomon C. Swisher has evidenced industry, versatility and rare good judgment, supplying a large need in both his native State of Virginia, where he was born in Marion County, November 23, 1829, and in Schuyler County, Ill., to which he came in the summer of 1857. His father, Jacob Swisher, was for twenty-five years a well known lumberman of Marion County, W. Va., arriving there in his youth from Butler County, Va., where he was born in 1812. He married Beersheba Ferrell, who bore him fifteen children, eleven of whom are now living, and who died while absent from her southern home, at about fifty years of age. Jacob Swisher also died while away from home, but in the same State, having attained to seventy-five years. He was an honorable and highly respected man and wielded a beneficial influence in all his walks of life. Following Solomon C., the oldest of this large family, came Elizabeth, who lives near the old home in Virginia; Enoch W., a farmer of Mississippi; Nancy, widow of Mr. Dukes, living also in Virginia; Nelson, at home; Harriet, in Virginia; Wesley, a soldier in the Federal army, who died during the service in a Southern hospital; Sarah, wife of Mr. Watson, of Monessen, Pa.; Henry W., of Virginia; Emeline, wife of John Swisher (not a relative), and a resident of West Virginia; Robert, deceased in Hancock, Ill.; Jennie, who died single at the age of forty; Elvira lives in Marion County, W. Va.; Frank, a resident of the vicinity of Canton, W. Va.; and a child who died in infancy.

As the oldest son in his father's large family, Solomon C. Swisher naturally assisted in the lumber business, and for years engaged in rafting on the Monongahela River, and in hewing and dressing logs. The occupation offered much of interest and adventure, and in the free and open air life the youth secured physical and moral strength, as well as business independence and sagacity. June 6, 1856, he was united in marriage to Rebecca T. Vincent, daughter of Jacob and Annie (Brain) Vincent, born in Marion County, W. Va., November 17, 1835. A year after the marriage of the young people, accompanied by the father of Mrs. Swisher, they undertook the long journey from Virginia to Schuyler County, Ill., in a wagon drawn by two horses, camping by the wayside at night and spending thirty-one days on the road. Arriving at their destination November 21, 1857, they spent the rest of the winter in a log house owned by Rev. Aaron Wright, in Section 11, Woodstock Township, and in the spring of 1858, Mr. Swisher and Mr. Vincent became equal owners of a farm of 160 acres in Section 9, the same township. A small log cabin and ten cultivated acres constituted the sole improvements on this land, and both families lived in the cabin until success made possible the erection of more commodious quarters.

Having much timber to cut down on his land, the experience of Mr. Swisher back in Virginia stood him in good stead, for he soon began to convert his timber into barrel staves, and for many years he found an extensive patron for his barrels in Thomas Wilson, than whom he never had a better friend. Practically all of the suitable timber on his land went into barrels, and the packers of Rushville found him ready and resourceful in supplying their need. But barrel-making was not allowed to interfere with the general improvement of the farm, and its advancement towards a profitable and comfortable home was rapid and certain. At present he has a fine modern rural residence, well furnished throughout, and surrounded with trees, shrubs, gardens and an orchard. His barns and out-houses are ample for the protection of stock during the winter, and for the housing of surplus produce and machinery.

By no means self-centered in his interests, Mr. Swisher has variously contributed to the advancement of the community, has been a staunch supporter of the Democratic party, held many offices, including that of first Town Clerk, Commissioner of Highways, and member of the Board of Supervisors for two years. For many years he was one of the most active members of the Grange, supporting it with his enthusiasm and constant attendance, and otherwise identifying himself with a movement which has for its primal object the promotion of the interests of agriculture. Mr. and Mrs. Swisher are the parents of nine children: Emma, widow of John Spencer, mother of Lydia Spencer, and who lives with her father; Carson; Ida, deceased wife of George M. Swisher; Laura, twice married, and now the wife of John Dunn, of Champaign County, Ill.; George E., a lawyer and real-estate broker of Oklahoma City, Okla.; Lauretta, wife of Philip Eyler, of Woodstock Township; Edith, deceased at the age of eighteen years; Martha, wife of James B. Hair, of Round Lake, Minn.; and Clarence, a carpenter and builder of Oklahoma City, who married Bessie Luther. Swisher has been the sole architect of his growing fortunes, and his life is a tribute to the qualities of industry, persistence and faith in his ability to succeed. At the age of seventy-eight, and after half a century in Schuyler County, he finds himself one of its fortunate and highly respected citizens, the possessor of a liberal competence, and the prospect of many more years of usefulness.

TAGGART, Benjamin F.—History relates that the Taggart family came originally from the Isle of Wight, an island in the English Channel off the south coast of England, whence three brothers came to America and established the name in Massachusetts prior to the Revolutionary War. The son of one of these brothers was John Taggart, the father of Benjamin F., who later removed to Pennsylvania, where he married Ellie Wolverton, daughter of Peter Wolverton, who came to America from Holland before or during the Revolution. After the birth of five of his children, in 1828, John Taggart, accompanied by his father-in-law, removed to Illinois, settling in Schuyler County, and in many of their early experiences as pioneers they were associated. In the spring of that year (1828) they built a raft at Warren, Pa., on the Alleghany River, which they loaded with shingles, household supplies, five head of horses, two cows and a dog; at Cincinnati they sold a part of their goods and with the proceeds bought a flat-boat with which they proceeded down the Ohio River as far as Shawneetown, where they unloaded their cargo and by wagons started for Rock Island, Ill. When they reached Rushville, however, they were so pleased with its thrifty appearance that they decided to remain, and for two years they made their home in the location afterward occupied by the Halls, three miles north of Rushville. Selling out his holdings in Rushville Township in 1830, Mr. Taggart then came to Camden Township, and on the farm which he here purchased he rounded out the remainder of his long and useful life. When he first located here it was necessary to drive to Quincy to have his grist ground, a hardship which he soon overcame, for as he was a miller it was not long before he erected a mill in his vicinity. This was known as the Taggart mill, and he continued to operate it until 1844, when he sold it to Joseph Parrott, of Rushville. Several other mills besides his own were erected by Mr. Taggart, among them the first mill on Sugar Creek, which he built for William McKee, and one for Thomas Justus.

Lucinda J., the eldest child of John and Ellie (Wolverton) Taggart, became the wife of Dr. Charles S. Ward, of New Haven, Conn., who died in May, 1849, and there her death occurred in 1902, leaving four sons, three of whom graduated from Yale College as physicians; George and Charles, both physicians are deceased, the first-mentioned dying in South America, and the latter in Bridgeport, Conn. Henry C., is a wholesale hardware merchant in the latter city; and the other son, Edward F., is an electrician in Central America. The next child in the John Taggart family was Emily E., who became the wife of Dr. Samuel Clark, and in Aurora, Ill., where they made their home, both passed away, leaving three sons and four daughters, all of whom are living with the exception of one son, Marshall Taggart Clark, who died at the age of six years. Wealthy, another daughter, first married Simon Wilcox, and some time after his death in 1843, she married George Ryerson, and four children were born to them. Andrew J. died in 1841. All of the children of John and Effie (Wolverton) Taggart, mentioned thus far, were born in Pennsylvania prior to the removal to Illinois in 1828. Benjamin F., subject of this sketch, was born on the home farm in Camden Township, Schuyler County, February 17, 1832. Sarah became the wife of Philip Fryendall, of Batavia, Ill., by whom she had two sons and two daughters. Ellen (deceased) was buried in the cemetery at Batavia. The death of Stephen, second child of John Taggart, was one of the first recorded in Camden Township. Benjamin F. Taggart still has in his possession a chest brought by his grandfather, Peter Wolverton, across the Allegheny Mountains when he came to Illinois in 1828.

The earliest recollections in the life of Benjamin F. Taggart take him back in memory to the days spent in the log school house of pioneer days, whose advantages and comforts were nothing as compared to present-day conveniences and advanced courses of study. When he was fifteen years old his father died, December 12, 1847, and thereafter his life trend was in more important lines. In 1849 his mother purchased an eighty acre tract of land on Section 3, Camden Township, which was heavily timbered with white oak, and here Benjamin began his first independent work as a farmer, in time building a log cabin into which the mother and children moved, and there the mother and two children, Sarah and Ella, made their home until her death. Some time after this, July 16, 1854, Mr. Taggart was married to Miss Rebecca M. Hill, who was born in Guernsey County, Ohio, March 16, 1833, the daughter of Wesley and Mary Ann (Buckmaster) Hill. Mr. and Mrs. Hill were natives respectively of Delaware and Pennsylvania, but much of their married life had been spent in Ohio; in 1852 they came to Illinois and settled in Fulton County, but finally located in Brooklyn Township, where the death of the mother occurred. Mr. Hill thereafter removed to McDonough County, where he died in 1865.

In the little log cabin which Mr. Taggart had erected in 1849, he and his wife began house-keeping immediately after their marriage, and there, too, their four oldest children were born. The first shadow cast over their otherwise happy home was in the death of their two eldest children, a son and daughter. The third child, Helena Ollie, was born December 1, 1857, and is now the wife of Martin C. Bleecker, of Pueblo, Colo. Their two eldest sons, Warren F. and Frederick Guy Bleecker, are graduates of the Centennial University, Colorado. Together the brothers patented a steam motor that is destined to revolutionize the steam power of the world. The engine is equipped with an automatic governor which admits steam at full pressure, doing away entirely with the old idea of throttling, and thus eliminating the loss of steam energy. A company has been formed for the manufacture of the engines. The eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bleecker, Mary, is now the wife of James Pickard, a locomotive engineer on the Santa Fe Road and a resident of Topeka, Kan. Harold Bleecker died at the age of five years. Elson F., the youngest child, is still at home with his parents. Frank M. Taggart, born March 28, 1860, chose as his wife Elizabeth Wood, formerly a resident of Schuyler County, and they now make their home in Holbrook, Neb. They have had five children, as follows: Nellie May, the wife of Oscar Mart, of Furness County, Neb.; Jessie, Mrs. Ernest Leach, of Hendley, Neb.; Annie, the wife of John Patton; Mary F. and Gracie, the latter dying in childhood.

Until 1869 the log structure into which Mr. Taggart moved after his marriage remained the family home, but about that time he erected a modern residence in which they lived until it was destroyed by fire in 1893. During the latter year he built the residence now occupied by the family, a modern structure, which is indicative of the progressive spirit of the owner. For seventy-five years he has watched the march of progress in Schuyler County, and has borne his share of the discomforts of pioneer life, but notwithstanding these clouds which shadowed his pathway, he is content with the lot to which Fate led him. For over half a century he has had the love and companionship of the wife of his youth, and together in their declining years they are enjoying the comforts which their early struggles made possible. Mr. Taggart cast his first vote for President for Buchanan; later his sympathies were enlisted on the side of the Republican party and for some time he cast his ballot for the candidates of that party. More recently, however, he has given the weight of his influence to the cause of the Prohibition party. For many years he has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which he has assisted in maintaining, as he has every helpful measure, whether religious or secular. Personally Mr. Taggart is a man of noble qualities, which are nowhere better known and appreciated than in his own family. A close student and a constant reader all of his life, he is well versed along all lines and is an excellent conversationalist, one to whom it is a delight to listen.

TAYLOR, Henry W.—The history of that branch of the Taylor family to which Henry W. Taylor belonged is traced to the North of Ireland, where his grandfather, Matthew Taylor, was born of English parents. He emigrated to the United States in 1772 and took up his abode in Pennsylvania, passing away in Huntingdon County at the ripe old age of ninety-seven years. Before her marriage the grandmother was Miss McIlheney, she too being a native of Ireland, although a descendant of Scotch-Irish ancestors. She also lived to attain a great age, being in her ninety-sixth year at the time of her death. Among the children born to this couple was Alexander Taylor, a native of Pennsylvania, who as early as 1810 crossed over into the adjoining State of Ohio and there cleared a farm out of the very heart of the forest. In his pioneer labors he was cheered and encouraged by his faithful wife, formerly Betsy Scott, she too being a native of Pennsylvania. Her father, Nehemiah Scott, was a native of Long Island and the descendant of Scotch ancestry, while the mother, Mary Wick in maidenhood, was born in Washington County, Pa. Alexander Taylor passed away in Warren, Trumbull County, Ohio, at the age of fifty-five, and his wife in Burlington, Ia., at the advanced age of eighty years.

Henry W. Taylor was born in the family home in Trumbull County, Ohio, February 11, 1824. His parents thoroughly appreciated the value of an education, and no opportunity which lay in their power to bestow upon their son was denied him. Be it said to his credit that he appreciated the efforts which were made in his behalf, a co-operation which enabled him at the age of nineteen to take charge of a school. After following the teacher's profession for two years he gave it up to take a course in law, receiving private tutorage. In the course of time he graduated from his studies and began the practice of his profession. The news of the finding of gold in California, however, proved too alluring to pass him unheeded, and closing his office he went to the new Eldorado. With four yoke of oxen he made the trip overland, starting from Rushville, Ill., April 1, 1849, and arriving where the town of Maryville, Cal., is now located October 22, 1849. The fact that he remained in the gold fields for four years affords evidence that he was successful in his efforts as a miner.

Returning to Rushville, Ill., at the end of this time, Mr. Taylor was united in marriage, June 8, 1853, with Miss Cornelia Manlove, a native of Rushville, and the daughter of Jonathan D. and Sophronia (Chadsey) Manlove. The descended of an old Southern family and himself a native of North Carolina, Mr. Manlove came to Illinois at an early day, settling in Schuyler County in 1823, and here in 1826 he was married to Miss Chadsey, theirs being the third marriage celebrated in Schuyler County. After his return from California Mr. Taylor engaged in the lumber business, owning a lumber yard in Rushville, and in addition to its management also took contracts for building plank roads. He followed the lumber business until 1857, when he sold out all of his interests and removed to Brooklyn Township. Coming here at a time when settlers were few and far between, he bought considerable land, much of it being covered with heavy timber, owning in all 900 acres of land. Out of this he developed an excellent farm, upon which he made a specialty of raising fine blooded stock of all kinds. In addition to his agricultural interests he also maintained a mercantile establishment prior to the Civil War, and up to 1894, when he retired from active life.

Four children were born of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Taylor, as follows: Marion H., who became the wife of T. D. Lewis, of Brooklyn, Schuyler County; Ida M., and Fanette, who is the wife of Dr. J. E. Camp, an account of whose life is given at length elsewhere in this work, and Willie, who was born in 1862 and died in 1864. Throughout his life Mr. Taylor was a staunch supporter of the Whig party, and expressed his preference for its principles by casting his first vote for Zachary Taylor. At the time of the organization of the Republican party proper he gave his allegiance to that organization, his vote being cast for John C. Fremont. For many years he had been an active member of the Presbyterian Church, serving as an elder in that body, and Mrs. Taylor is still active in the benevolent and charitable work of that church. Mr. Taylor's death, December 20, 1896, brought to its close a life which had meant much to the well-being of Schuyler County in general and of Brooklyn Township in particular, none standing higher in the estimation of those who had known him for nearly half a century.

TEEL, Herschel Volany.—The distinction of being the youngest native son to wear the judicial ermine in Schuyler County is emphasized by the efficient and painstaking service of Herschel Volany Teel, during his eight years as County Judge of Schuyler County. Judge Teel, who represents one of the earliest and most substantial pioneer families of Illinois, was born in Rushville Township, Schuyler County, March 3, 1868, the second son of James A. and Elizabeth Smith Teel. Descended through both ancestral lines from German-Irish stock, he inherited the solidity, frugality, perseverance and thrift of the former, combined with the frank, ardent, pertinacious and courageous elements of the latter, which characteristics have made that sturdy strain, wherever planted, foremost in hardy undertaking and adventurous enterprise. His forefathers were not cradled in luxury; they were essentially the rugged vigorous pioneers of civilization, who assisted in the making of the early history of our county; Captain John Teel of Revolutionary fame, being the founder of this branch of the family. His son, John Teel, belonged to the regular army and served in the War of 1812. These two patriots resided in New Jersey; Henry P. Teel, son of John Teel and grandfather of Herschel Teel, resided in Pennsylvania, but in 1833 he followed the tide of Empire and moved his family west, finally locating in Schuyler County, then very sparsely settled.

The history of the maternal ancestors of the subject of this sketch is not so easily traced; it is only known that they settled here at an earlier date than the Teels, and it was upon the land cleared practically by the unaided efforts of his grandfather, Jonathan Smith, that Herschel Teel first saw the light of this mundane sphere. Here his youth was passed in the hard labors of the farm. Its comparative isolation inevitably created within him the spirit of the boundless prairie and fostered that freedom which knows not the restraint of aggregated humanity in cities. Heredity endowed him with a robust physical constitution and vigorous mind, while his early environment developed his innate powers of industry, perseverance and self-reliance to a very marked degree.

Eager for knowledge, he assiduously utilized every opportunity offered by the rural schools; in 1890 he graduated from the Rushville Normal and Business College; in 1894 from Eureka College and in 1895 he received his diploma from the Law Department of Northwestern University, was admitted to the bar and began the practice of his profession in Rushville, where he still resides. In 1898 he was elected County Judge on the Democratic ticket and again in 1902. During his tenure of office, several appeals were taken from his decision to the higher courts, and it speaks well for his ability as a jurist that in every case his decision was sustained by the superior court. As a lawyer he is a close student, a sagacious and conscientious counsellor, and merits and receives the high regard of the members of his profession and of his clientele.

Judge Teel evidences a marked predilection for the social and general, as well as professional, opportunities of life, and is a prominent member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Modern Woodmen of America, Knights of Pythias and Mutual Protective League. He is also one of the directors of the Bank of Rushville. To him have filtered the ambition and purpose which animated the pilgrimage of his pioneer ancestors and which, exercised in widely differing grooves of human achievement, already are maintaining their mission of securing the greatest justice and the greatest liberty to the society of mankind.

The basic principle of Herschel Teel's character is integrity, not only of thought but of word and deed as well. He is known for his sturdy independence of character, his devotion to his friends and his recognition of the equality of all men who are honest and upright, without regard to their social position; no man so low but feels he is a brother, and none so high but feels he is a peer.

TEEL, James A.—During his many years of association with Schuyler County, James A. Teel was known as an increasingly prosperous farmer, and as a man who had sufficient breadth and ability to reach out and utilize many opportunities not immediately at hand. More than the average, he seemed to realize the responsibility of the agriculturist as a factor in the world's progress, and evidently believed that the greatest development came through participation in the general affairs and responsibilities of the community. He was particularly zealous and successful in promoting the breeding of fine cattle, and during the years of his greatest activity in this line his profits were unusually satisfying to himself and encouraging to those similarly employed.

James Alexander Teel was born in Washington County, Pa., July 19, 1830, and was a great-grandson of Captain John Teel, a native of Ireland who settled in New Jersey, and after commanding a company in the Revolutionary War, was buried with the military honors due his rank. John Teel, son of Captain Teel, and grandfather of James A., was born in New Jersey, served five years in the regular army, and participated in the War of 1812. His son, Henry P., the next in line of succession, also was a native of New Jersey, and it was his energy and courage that shifted the family fortunes to Pennsylvania, where he engaged in farming in Washington County and whence he finally pushed still further westward to the outpost of civilization in Schuyler County in 1833. Two years later he removed to the Territory of Iowa, and after a year spent at Fort Madison, returned to Schuyler County, in 1845, locating on Section 16, Rushville Township, where Calvin Hobart had erected the first cabin in the county. Martha Ann Mathews, wife of Henry P. Teel, was a daughter of James Mathews, whose father, Thomas Mathews, was a native of Ireland.

Three years old when his father arrived in Schuyler County, James A. Teel had meager educational or other advantages, but he had the pioneering instinct of his sire deeply implanted in his nature, with the purpose and determination to make his dream come true. In this he proved himself one of the hardy and bold spirits of his town, as against the cautious and timid class who were not equal to the hazards of penetration to the Pacific Coast; an outdoor man, an adventurer, who wanted something to conquer and who followed the star of empire to the continent's rim. Arriving at the Mecca of his desires, he became a part of that unwritten chapter of romantic history which thrilled the country, and for two years lived in the ribald camps of the Argonauts, taking something from the earth in reward for his toil and self-sacrifice. Again he journeyed westward in 1853, participating for several months in the pagan pleasure of life and the romantic zest for adventure which characterized the surroundings of the fortune seekers.

As before, his good fortune was in no way exceptional, adding but little to his financial resources. Farming rather than mining was his life-work, and when again on the old place in Schuyler County, he devoted practically all his time and the rest of his life to this pursuit. He engaged extensively in general farming and stock-raising, attaining to special prominence as a Short-horn cattle breeder, in which he first became interested before the Civil War. For a number of years he was President of the Schuyler County Farmers' Institute, and took a keen interest in its affairs. With the founding of the Bank of Schuyler in 1890, he became one of the stockholders, and later was elected Vice-President of that institution. On his death, October 22, 1902, at the age of seventy-two years, he was the owner of 1,200 acres of farm land, besides various town properties in Rushville. Illness somewhat changed the current of the later years of his life, but he bore all physical trials with rare patience, and applied that fine philosophy which had made light of many obstacles and helped him over many of the rough places in his career.

In 1856 Mr. Teel married Elizabeth Smith, of Rushville Township, and of this union there were the following named children: Everett Lee, a young man of exceptional promise who had just been admitted to the bar and commenced the practice of his profession at Galesburg, Ill., where, on returning from a visit to his parents, he was accidentally killed, being run over by an express train; Judge H. V. Teel, mention of whom may be found elsewhere in this work; Mrs. Neosha M. Mills; Marshall E.; Hulda, deceased; and Walter H. A staunch Democrat in politics, he was Supervisor of his township several terms, and in 1894 was elected to the State Legislature, his representation of the people reflecting his broad sense of justice, his intolerance of fraud and deception, and his fearlessness in insisting upon fair and above-board legislation. He was an agreeable and approachable man, loyal to the public interests and friends, and he possessed the faculty of interesting other people in his projects and securing their support and co-operation. His life gave encouragement to the faint hearted, and was an expression of force, determination and successful achievement.

TEEL, Walter H.—An industry of incalculable benefit to the stock raiser of the United States, yet one which in earlier years was neglected to a deplorable degree, is that of the breeding of thoroughbred stock. While countries in the old world have made a specialty of this business for years, our own country failed until recently to grasp the opportunity thus presented. It is a source of gratification to all concerned that the twentieth century has witnessed a remarkable change in the opinion of agriculturists concerning grades of stock, and now thousands are spent to bring up herds where formerly hundreds were denied. No stock breeder of Schuyler County attained more widespread fame for the superior quality of his importations and the fine points of his herds than did James A. Teel, whose death deprived the State of one of its most influential stockmen. Fortunately, under his experienced oversight, a son, Walter H., had been trained to a careful and thorough knowledge of stock, and the latter has successfully carried on the business of raising and selling thoroughbred Short-horn cattle so well established by the father.

Born on the home farm, March 28, 1877, Walter H. Teel received his education in the district schools and the Rushville Union School, supplemented by attendance at the Rushville Normal, from which he was graduated in 1898. Meanwhile he had devoted his summer months to aiding his father on the farm, and thus early in life had gained a practical knowledge of the stock business, which is now of invaluable assistance to him. His father had been one of the first to import stock and, for forty years, had stood at the head of the Short-horn industry in the State, so that a study of the business under him was in itself an education. Under his supervision were more than fourteen hundred acres in Rushville and Buena Vista Townships, the family residence being situated on Section 18, Rushville Township. After the death of the father in 1902, the son assumed the entire management of the stock, and since then he has added to the fame of the herd, in which at times he has had as many as one hundred and twenty-five head of registered cattle. The part of the home farm, which now belongs to the subject of this sketch, consisting of 320 acres on Sections 17 and 18, Rushville Township, is one of the finest estates in Schuyler County. Since the present owner assumed control in 1902 many improvements have been made, chief among which is a hay and stock barn, sixty feet square, furnishing ample accommodations for hay, stock and machinery.

The determination of Mr. Teel to establish and sustain a stock industry surpassed by none in this part of the State has kept him busily engaged in the work on the home farm and left him little leisure for participation in outside matters, in which, indeed, he takes no part aside from voting the ticket of the Democratic party and identifying himself with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Among acquaintances he is respected for those qualities that win the admiration of all, while in stock raising circles he is regarded as an expert judge and an authority concerning Short-horns. His pleasant country home is presided over by Mrs. Teel, whom he married January 5, 1899, and who was Miss Josephine Knock, daughter of Daniel Knock, one of the early settlers of Schuyler County.

THARP, Jonathan.—In the possession of 160 acres of land in Section 15, Woodstock Township, Jonathan Tharp finds the realization of a meritorious early ambition. While the owner and occupant of his present farm only since 1889, he is by no means the establisher of Tharp activity in Schuyler County, as his father, Jonathan Tharp, Sr., came here in the log cabin era, establishing a precedent for faithful and practical general service, which since has been maintained by his large family of children. Jonathan Tharp, the elder, was born in South Carolina, and married Anna Manlove, a native of the same State. The Manlove family has been no less important in the development of this Section than the Tharp family, as Jonathan D. Manlove, father of Mrs. Tharp, came to Schuyler County in 1824, settling on land where, in 1826, he laid out and platted what afterward was called the town of Rushville. The Manloves were of the Quaker faith, and descendants of the pioneer never have departed from these teachings.

Jonathan Tharp, Sr., located in Rushville Township, and endured all of the privations incident to the earliest of pioneering. For their substantial food the family subsisted chiefly on game, and for several years the log cabin was in danger of attack by the wild denizens of the plains, both human and animal. When the head of the house used to take his grist to Quincy to be ground, his wife would nail clap-boards over the door that wolves might not enter the cabin. Around this couple grew up a family of six sons and three daughters, all of whom reached maturity, and three of whom were soldiers in the Civil War. The father dying in 1854, the mother was left with the care of the family, and it is to her everlasting credit that she kept her children together, educated them to the best of her ability, and instilled into them ideals of useful citizenship. The oldest son, James, of Astoria Township, Fulton County, served three years in the Union army; John was a soldier, serving as a hundred-day man first, and then in the One Hundred and Fifty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry for one year, returned to his home in January, 1866, and died in 1872; Jonathan, Jr.; James served three years in the One Hundred and Nineteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry; Marion was a member of the the Seventh Missouri Cavalry, and was killed July 3, 1863, by a shot fired from ambush; Stephen is a farmer in Woodstock Township; Louzania, married Philo Morris, and both are deceased; Bettie became the wife of L. G. Persinger, and both are deceased; Eli died in Montana; and Mary is the deceased wife of Philip Skiles. The mother of this family lived to see all of her children well established in life, her death occurring in 1886, at the age of eighty-three years.

Jonathan Tharp, Jr., attended the log school house in Buena Vista Township, near where he was born January 26, 1848. He remained on the old place until 1871, when, because of the sale of the old place, he went to Butler County, Kan., where hard times prevailed to an unusual extent. In consequence he returned to Schuyler County, the same year, and with his brother, Stephen, worked at farming until 1873. He then rented eighty acres of land of old Dr. Leach, operated the same until 1881, and that year bought 104 acres in Bainbridge Township. Later he traded his farm for eighty acres in another part of the township, and in 1889 sold that and bought 100 acres of his present farm, to which he since has added sixty acres. This land was in very unsatisfactory condition, and its improvement has entailed much arduous labor. Today it is one of the finest properties in the township, and its improvements compare well with any to be found in the State. Mr. Tharp makes a specialty of registered Poland-China hogs, and his hog house, sixty-four by sixteen feet in dimensions, affords ample space for the care of these valuable animals. He also raises a high grade of Short-horn cattle.

While a staunch Republican, Mr. Tharp has never solicited or been willing to accept local office. He is not a member of any church, but contributes generously towards church and charitable undertakings, giving his encouragement also to the cause of education and good roads. He is a broad-minded and well posted farmer, and by the purity and usefulness of his life sets an example of worth to the rising generation. To himself and wife have been born seven children, four of whom are living: Loren, George W., Dora and May. Eli Franklin died at the age of seventeen years, and Ella F. and John died in infancy.

THARP, Stephen.—As different members of the Tharp family have been identified with the most substantial progress of Woodstock Township for nearly eighty years, it requires no stretch of propriety to place them in the fore ranks of Schuyler County pioneers, and to accord them a prominent position in a history which aims to trace the advanced and teeming life of the present back to the primitive poverty of the past.

Stephen Tharp was born October 14, 1841, on the Harvey place, later known as the old Tharp farm, north of Rushville in Section 14, Woodstock Township, Schuyler County. He is the son of Jonathan and Anna (Manlove) Tharp, both natives of North Carolina, who came to Illinois in 1829. They made the long trip by ox-team, in the fall of that year reaching their destination on the present site of Rushville. One of the first acts of the husbandman was to sow wheat on the land which he had entered, and which is now occupied by the "Little Chicago Store," owned by A. J. Lashmett. This first sowing, however, was not accomplished until Mr. Tharp had journeyed to Pike County in order to obtain his seed, and his first crop was cut with a reaper hook and threshed with a flail. This place was the family home for two years, after which successive removals were made to Round Prairie and Burnham Township, and finally Stephen Tharp entered land and bought the interest of the Manlove heirs in the farm now owned by the Chadsey estate, Section 14, Woodstock Township.

The first years of their residence in Schuyler County constituted a trying period in the lives of the Tharp family, but in the after period, when all was comfortable and serene, they dearly loved to recount their experiences, and their children have passed many enjoyable hours in listening to the stories of their parents. In common with their neighbors they had many tales to tell regarding the "Deep Snow of 1830." Over the prodigious fall of snow came a driving storm of sleet, and the men and larger boys were obliged to tie boards to their feet, so that they could get to the corn, dig it out of the snow drifts and feed the live-stock. Woman-like, Mrs. Tharp took great pride in telling how she had dressed the first white male child born in Schuyler County—Jack Dyse by name, who grew up a reminder of that place.

In those days the great pests of the settlers were wolves and snakes, and hunts were often organized to exterminate both. The customary plan of a snake raid was to first burn a clear space around the den of the reptiles, and then start a fire some distance beyond; as the snakes were thus driven into the clear space around their den, they were attacked by dogs and men. At one famous snake hunt, in which the Tharps participated, four hundred reptiles were victims of the slaughter. But the good mother was permitted to see wolves, snakes and Indians replaced by more agreeable neighbors, their log house by a fine home, the wigwam by the church and school, and the wheat hook and the flail by the gigantic harvester, with other evidences of a new civilization for which she and her associates had prepared the way. She passed away July 7, 1877, at the age of seventy-four years, after surviving her husband for more than twenty-two years, his demise having occurred in April, 1855. The father, therefore, although he had witnessed many and great changes, had not lived to see so remarkable a contrast between the past and the present as his good wife. The remains of both repose in the cemetery near Rushville.

Stephen Tharp was reared on the old home farm and received his education in the old log school house at the Cross Roads. His first marriage on April 24, 1864, was to Miss Susanna Smith, daughter of William Smith, an Ohio man and a Schuyler County pioneer. He made his home on the old farm until 1873, when he purchased 120 acres of land in Section 14, Woodstock Township, and commenced its cultivation and improvement. Among other valuable and attractive additions was a fine frame residence, in which the widowed mother resided for several years. By his first marriage Mr. Tharp had the following named children: Nora, who was born in Woodstock Township and is the wife of O. H. Kelly, a farmer; Emma, who married William Lawler, also a farmer of Woodstock Township; Sheridan, who married Lillie Wardell, and is farming on the home place; Lydia, wife of Stewart Gaddis, a farmer of Bainbridge Township, and William, a twin brother of Lydia. The mother of this family died in November, 1873, and the father was married, in 1877, to Mrs. Isabelle Goodwin, widow of John P. Goodwin. The present Mrs. Tharp was born in Rushville, Ill., on the 9th of December, 1848, and is a daughter of Daniel Anderson, who was a native of Ohio, and came to Schuyler County in 1838. The offspring of the second union are: Cora, now the wife of Vernon Dace, a resident of Huntsville, Ill.; Jesse, who is a clerk in Runkel's store, at Rushville, and married Anna Landon; Susan, wife of James Wardell, a farmer; Lilly, who married James Rodson, a painter living at Mount Sterling, Ill.; Nettie, wife of Everett Krouse, her husband being a farmer of Bainbridge Township; Ettie, a twin sister of Nettie, who is now living at home; and Elizabeth and Mabel, both also living with their parents. Mr. and Mrs. Tharp have thirteen children and thirty-two grandchildren now living, and the family is among the most substantial and honored of the true pioneer stock. The parents have always been earnest Methodists and devout Christians in the highest sense of the word. In politics, Mr. Tharp is still a Republican of the Lincoln type.

THOMPSON, Charles W.—In response to the demand, in order to meet the agricultural emergencies of the present for a different class of men from those who had to deal with crude pioneer conditions, there have arisen in Schuyler County many intelligent and progressive landmen, recruited from the best families, whose influence tends to the advancement of science and enlightenment. In this category belongs Charles W. Thompson, son of James D. Thompson, mention of whom will be found in an adjoining section of this work. Mr. Thompson was born on the old Thompson homestead January 19, 1864, and received his preliminary education in what was known as the Fey school district. His youth was unevenful, and filled with the duties and diversions which go to make up the life of the average farm-reared boy. He developed, however, more than average business ability, and this has been of great use to him as one of the most extensive breeders and marketers of Aberdeen-Angus cattle in Schuyler County.

A turning point in the life of Mr. Thompson was his marriage, December 23, 1891, to Della K. Campbell, a native of Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County, and daughter of George W. Campbell, one of the pioneers of the county. The young people started housekeeping on Section 25, Woodstock Township, but in 1898, after the death of the elder Thompson, they returned to the old place and lived there until 1902. In the spring of that year Mr. Thompson opened a general store in what now is called Layton, in Woodstock Township, and from a small beginning has worked up a large and prosperous trade. His farm of 260 acres represents much that is progressive and scientific in the agricultural world, and no better Aberdeen-Angus cattle roam the prairie of the Central West than here find a home. There are also high grades of hogs and horses on the farm, and corn and general produce are raised in large quantities. Mr. Thompson has a large and commodious home, and his stock have warm and comfortable winter quarters. He is one of the busiest, as well as most successful men of the township, and few are doing so much to maintain the higher standards of country life and practice.

In politics, Mr. Thompson is an uncompromising Democrat, but has always been too busy either to seek or to accept office. In faith he is a believer in the Universal Doctrine, and is a member of the Grange, for whose interests he has been a faithful and consistent worker. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson have three children: Mary Margaret, born November 12, 1893; Laura C., born January 3, 1902; and Georgia W., born August 18, 1903. Mr. Thompson is a well informed, agreeable and popular gentleman trustworthy and respected in his business and social relations.

THOMPSON, J. Arthur, a native of Woodstock Township, Schuyler County, Ill., and one of the brightest and most worthy of the young men who have been reared in that locality, was born January 18, 1883, the son of William J. and Margaret J. (Arthur) Thompson, a narrative of whose career, with details of the family history, appears elsewhere in this connection. The subject of this sketch attended the district schools in the vicinity of his home, and then taking the regular examination, received a scholarship in the Illinois State University, in which he was a student for five years, the degree of B. S. being conferred upon him at the end of that period. In August, 1907, he was recommended by the Board of Trustees of that institution for a position as teacher of agriculture in Corea. He passed the final examination at Nashville, Tenn., with honor, and on the 27th of the above mentioned month, started from Vancouver, B. C., stopping briefly in Japan, after touching at several foreign ports, during the voyage thither, reached his destination on September 12th next following. Since assuming charge of his work in Corea, he has met with remarkable success. His school is a one-story, thatched structure, covered with straw, a glimpse of which would be an interesting revelation to many of his former "chums," accustomed as they are to the superior facilities afforded by school edifices in Illinois.

While at home, Mr. Thompson was a member of the Grange, and when a student, was President of the Agricultural Club of the Illinois State University, as well as of the Y. M. C. A.

On September 15, 1908, Mr. Thompson will be married to Miss Anna Richl, of Alton, Ill., who sails on August 15, to meet him at Songdo, where he is carrying on his labors with such gratifying results. His religious connection was with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in which he acted in the capacity of class leader, and officiated as Sunday School Superintendent. On political issues, he was a supporter of the Democratic party.

THOMPSON, James D.—With the passing of James D. Thompson, July 30, 1897, a busy and useful life came to its conclusion, leaving in its wake, for the guidance of the workers of a later day, many lessons in courage, perseverance and sound judgment. Mr. Thompson had to his credit seventy-four years, having been born in Crawford County, Pa., March 30, 1823. He was heir to the best traits of the Irish-German-English peoples, the men on both sides of his family for the most part following either farming or such staple trades as carpentering and millwrighting. His paternal grandfather, William Thompson, was born in Ireland, in his boyhood crossing the sea to America, where he followed his trade of carpenter for the remainder of his life. Both he and his wife reached the age of three-score years and ten, living for the most part in Pennsylvania, which knew him first as a lad with a rich Irish brogue and but few financial assets.

William Thompson, Jr., son of the immigrant, was born in the Keystone State, and married Mary Peterson, daughter of James and Elizabeth (Abbott) Peterson, of English and German descent, who died in Pennsylvania at the age of ninety-one and ninety years, respectively. To William and Elizabeth Thompson were given ten children, of whom James D., the subject of this sketch, was third; William Thompson, Jr., was a millwright by trade, and in 1837 brought his family to Illinois, two years later purchasing a farm in Brown County, upon which he settled May 14, 1839. His hopes of cultivating this farm were not destined to realization, for with the coming of the fall of 1839, his life went out at the age of fifty-four years and seven months. He left a wife and eight children—five girls and three boys—who after his death rented land for several years, locating then on a tract in Brown County purchased by the father, where the mother died at the age of eighty-six years.

James D. Thompson was fourteen years old when the family came to Illinois, and sixteen when, through the death of his father, he was obliged to shoulder large responsibilities. He remained with his mother and the rest of the children until his marriage, April 3, 1856, to Margaret E. Grosclaude, who was born in France, April 27, 1830, a daughter of James F. and Catherine E. (Jonte) Grosclaude, and who came to America with her parents in 1833, locating in Woodstock Township, Schuyler County. Mr. Grosclaude died September 30, 1878, at the age of seventy-two years. The maternal grandfather, Peter J. Jonte, was born in France in February, 1776, and died October 2, 1846, while his wife, Susan (Landon) Jonte, was born March 25, 1774, and died June 7, 1842. To Mr. and Mrs. Thompson were born six children: Mary E., wife of R. T. Briggie, of Springfield, Ill.; William J., mentioned elsewhere in this work; Jefferson E., of Fredonia, Kan.; Emily L., wife of A. C. Rowland, of Rushville, Ill.; Charles W., whose sketch also appears in a preceding section; and Margarette Lorena, wife of Charles A. Myers, of Los Angeles, Cal.

Not only was Mr. Thompson prominently connected with the farming interests of Schuyler County for many years, but he was active in the promotion of its educational welfare, among other offices having held that of member of the Board of Education for twenty years. He was a strong and unyielding Democrat, and an officeholder who discharged his duties with honesty and ability. He became the owner of several hundred acres of land, the greater part of it valuable, and his prosperity resulted solely from his own ability to succeed. He was a man of genial and interesting personality, a firm believer in the good existing in all with whom he was associated, and possessing a cheerful philosophy which tided him over many of the rough places in the path of life. The wife who shared his increasing fortunes, and who cared for him tenderly when illness befell him in his later days, left the old homestead after his death and since has made her home in the city of Rushville.

THOMPSON, William J.—The enviable standing of Schuyler County, as one of the finest agricultural sections of Illinois, may be attributed largely to the practical, experienced and progressive men who long have been at the head of its farming enterprises, and who have succeeded in reaping large returns from the skilled tilling of the soil. Not the least successful of these men is William J. Thompson, who is engaged in raising stock and in general farm pursuits on his finely improved property in Woodstock Township. Beginning with a small purchase, he has added to the same from time to time until now he owns 500 acres in Woodstock and Bainbridge Townships, and all of this has been gained by indefatigable labor backed by sound judgment.

Knox County, Ill., is Mr. Thompson's native place, where he was born July 16, 1858, his father being James D. Thompson, who died July 30, 1897. While he was still quite young the family came to Schuyler County, and here he attended the country schools and aided in the cultivation of the home farm. Upon attaining the required age he was granted a teacher's certificate, but this he never used, preferring to devote his attention exclusively to agricultural pursuits. November 10, 1881, he was united in marriage with Miss Margaret J. Arthur, who was born in McDonough County, Ill., September 24, 1861, a daughter of Abraham and Annie (Hageman) Arthur, the former of whom died October 14, 1898, and the latter May 16, 1905.

After his marriage Mr. Thompson brought his young wife to the farm, where ever since they have made their home. The original tract comprised sixty-two acres on Section 36, Woodstock Township, but since the purchase of that estate he has added by later purchases until now, as previously stated, he and his wife have the title to 500 acres of improved and timber lands.

Mr. and Mrs. Thompson's family consists of eleven children, namely: James A., who received a superior education at the University of Illinois, from which he was graduated in June, 1905; Clarence J. married Belye Rittenhouse, and lives on a farm in Woodstock Township; Nettie May is wife of Harvey Armstrong, a farmer of Bainbridge Township; Roy F. is on the home farm; Walter E., graduated from the Rushville Normal School with the Class of 1907; Katie, Margarette, Anna Lorena and Bertha Emily are with their parents on the old homestead; Jesse Decatur and Essie Dora (twins), and Gertrude Irene. James A., the older son, spent five years in the University of Illinois, meanwhile receiving a scholarship and teacher's certificate, and in 1905 taking the degree of Bachelor of Science. After finishing his course at the University he became an instructor at Hampton Institute, Va., retaining this position until July, 1907, when he accepted a position as teacher in Corea, going to that country in August of that year, and is now conducting an agricultural college at Songdo, Corea, with satisfactory success. It has been the ambition of the parents to provide their children with the best educational advantages the country affords, and thus prepare them for whatever duties may await them in future years.

In their religious relations Mr. and Mrs. Thompson hold membership with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and have contributed generously to the missionary and charitable work of that denomination. Politically he has voted with the Democratic party ever since he attained his majority. For twenty years he held the office of Justice of the Peace, besides having served as School Trustee. During the spring of 1907 he was elected Supervisor of Woodstock Township, in which responsible position he has proved himself entitled to the fullest confidence of the people, and has supported all measures calculated to promote the general welfare, while at the same time aiming to protect the interests of the taxpayers. Besides his other business connections he is a stockholder in the Bank of Rushville. In church work, in politics, in the Grange, in agricultural affairs, and, indeed, in every association of life, he has been ready to do his part and has contributed his quota to the permanent development of his township.

TURNER, Allen R.—It falls to the lot of few men to look back upon a life so bountifully lengthened out and so diligently, usefully and virtuously spent, as that of the worthy man above named, who still occupies the farm in Buena Vista Township, which became his home as early as 1834. The birth of Mr. Turner occurred in Rushville Township, Schuyler County, Easter Sunday, April 22, 1832, and he is a son of Samuel and Rachel (Robertson) Turner, natives of Virginia, and North Carolina, respectively, and grandson of Elias Turner, also a native of the South. Elias Turner's life was not a creditable one, and he furnished a terrible example of the curse of drink. His wife stood his abuse and neglect as long as she could, and then rebelled against bringing her children up in such an atmosphere. When her son, Samuel, was about six months old, she took the child in her arms with a few personal belongings, and set out afoot for a portion of Southern Illinois, known as the American Bottom, and which then was the home of Governor Ford. Here she remained about five years, then returned to her native State for her olderson, Willis, on horseback, later settling with both of her sons in Madison County, Ill. After the death of their mother, Samuel and Willis came to Schuyler County in 1823, this section of the State at that time being part of Pike County, and here Samuel Turner built the fourth house in the county, but three permanent settlers having preceded him here. This house he never occupied, however, but returned with his brother to Madison County, where Willis was taken sick and finally died. After settling up the family affairs Samuel returned to Schuyler County in 1825, and here his death occurred April 6, 1855, he having been born in 1790. His wife, who was born in 1795, died April 2, 1843.

Both were devout members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in 1840, Mr. Turner joined the first temperance society organized in Schuyler County. The lesson of his father's life was a perpetual warning in his ears, sinking so deep into his nature that he never wearied in his endeavor to warn others from the terrible shoal of mental and moral destruction.

Allen R. Turner attended the subscription schools and passed his youth on the home farm in Buena Vista Township. The lure of the mines on the Pacific slope turned his attention from the slow and laborious methods of getting money by farming, and in 1850 he crossed the plains with oxen and a prairie schooner, taking about six months for the trip. He spent about five months in the well known gold camps of California, but his experience was that of the average rather than exceptional miner, and he was glad of the opportunity to return to Schuyler County, where the rewards of labor were comparatively sure. Again he took up the task of farming on the old place which has been his home since he was two years old, and the energy of his mature years is evident in every department of its activity. The place now contains 170 acres in one of the garden spots of the Central West, and certainly no home in Buena Vista Township has more about it of genuine homelikeness. As the children have grown to maturity the two oldest have each been given 160 acres of the property, the third child having been given ninety acres adjoining the old place.

The marriage of Mr. Turner and Isabella A. Sparks, occurred in Buena Vista Township, March 9, 1852, where she was born January 24, 1831, a daughter of Lemuel Sparks, and they became the parents of four children: Otto, born March 14, 1853, Darwin Samuel, born April 13, 1857; Willis Fred, born March 14, 1854; and Olive Rose, born January 28, 1867. Otto Sparks married Mary Etta Ford; Darwin Samuel married Emma B. Nelson; Willis Fred married Alice Bertroche; and Olive Rose became the wife of James C. Bartlow. The decease of the mother, Mrs. Allen R. Turner, occurred February 9, 1893, and was much deplored by a large circle of friends. In political affiliation Mr. Turner is a Prohibitionist, and for sixty years has unceasingly advocated temperance. His convictions on this subject are profound and unchangeable, and have been the means of his accomplishing a world of good. In all ways his life has been illuminating and helpful, and he has established a standard of moral rectitude and courage far beyond the average of his fellow wayfarers. By all classes of people in the county he is held in sincere respect, and no citizen in the community has a cleaner or more enviable record.

TURNER, John S.—For nearly fifteen years Mr. Turner has made his home continuously at his present location, on Section 12, Birmingham Township, Schuyler County, where he has operated 160 acres of excellent land, devoted to general farming and stock raising. Descended from Southern ancestry, he was born in Adair County, Ky., February 22, 1840, a son of W. S. P. and Sarah (James) Turner, who were born in Virginia and Adair County, Ky., respectively. With his parents, W. S. P. Turner went to Kentucky and settled in Adair County, and there some time later occurred his marriage with Miss James. In 1853, after the birth of six of their children, the parents came to Illinois, and in Browning Township, Schuyler County, Mr. Turner purchased eighty acres of timber land. Making a clearing in the wilderness he erected a rude cabin for the shelter of his family, but this having been destroyed by fire, he later erected a more comfortable and commodious house, with a stick chimney fireplace. After residing on this farm for twenty years, during which time he had cleared and placed under cultivation eighty acres of the tract, he sold the property in 1873 and removed to Astoria, Fulton County, Ill., where for a short time he followed a mercantile business. It is safe to presume that this venture was not as remunerative as he had anticipated, for in 1874 he went to Hancock County and resumed farming, renting a farm upon which he made his home the remainder of his life. He passed away at the ripe old age of eighty-three years, his wife also dying in Hancock County. During his early years Mr. Turner was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. Throughout his life he exemplified the teachings which he professed, and for forty years was a local minister in his denomination. Through his teaching and upright living many were led to follow better lives and all who came in contact with him received an uplift and encouragement.

Nine children blessed the marriage of W. S. P. Turner and his wife, of this number John S. being the eldest. The next two children, Amanda and George B., are both deceased. Ellen became the wife of D. M. Stockman, a veteran of the Civil War, and they make their home in Omaha, Neb. Mary is the wife of a Mr. Scott, who owns a large farm in Hancock County, and Albert is a resident of Texas. Sarah is the wife of Zachariah Duncan, who is a carpenter in Carthage, Ill. Martha, deceased, was the wife of W. D. Cloud. The youngest child, William R., makes his home in St. Mary, Hancock County.

After receiving a limited education in the district schools of Adair County, Ky., John S. Turner gave his services to his father, and after coming to Illinois was an invaluable assistant in removing the timber and underbrush from the farm upon which the family located. The call to arms at the breaking out of the Civil War found him a young man of twenty-one years who was willing and anxious to do his part as a loyal citizen. In August, 1861, his name was enrolled as a member of Company H, Third Illinois Cavalry, his enlistment being for a term of three years. From Camp Butler his regiment was ordered to St. Louis, from there to Jefferson City and on to Lebanon, Mo. At Pea Ridge they were under fire for three days, many of the Third Cavalry being killed and wounded, and five from Company H met death in this battle. Mr. Turner escaped narrowly with his own life, for on three occasions his horse was shot under him, once at the battle of Pea Ridge and later at a battle in Tennessee, and still later at Batesville, Ark. At Memphis, Tenn., the Third Cavalry met General Forrest in an engagement and also participated in the battle of Nashville. At the close of his term of service Mr. Turner was honorably discharged at St. Louis, having never been in the hospital during the three years he was in the service, although during that time he had suffered untold hardships both in battle and in long marches.

Returning to Astoria after his army service, Mr. Turner was married in that city, September 1, 1864, to Miss Alice Ewing, who was born near Zanesville, Ohio, May 10, 1845, the daughter of Josiah Ewing. After the death of her husband Mrs. Josiah Ewing brought her family to Illinois, settling in Astoria, where her death finally occurred. A large family of children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Turner, of whom we mention the following: Mary E., who was born in Astoria October 5, 1865, died at the age of six years; Sally Ann, born in the same city August 24, 1867, died in 1871; Hattie J., who was born in Hancock County, Ill., January 22, 1870, passed away in 1883; Harry E., who was born in the same county, March 24, 1872, married Nellie Burton and makes his home in Nebraska; William, born in Schuyler County, May 3, 1874, died when three years old; Arthur O., who was born in Schuyler County, February 27, 1876, chose as his wife Miss Gertrude Erlinger, a native of Cedar County, Mo., and two daughters have been born to them, Flossie and Alice; David A., born April 3, 1878, is a farmer in Hancock County, and by his marriage with Miss Cora Irwin he had two children, Alta and Lee L., one of whom died in infancy; George R., born in Schuyler County, August 4, 1881, now makes his home in Palisade, Neb.; Bertha, the youngest child, born March 2, 1888, and is still at home with her parents. For about twelve years after coming to Birmingham Township, Mr. Turner bought and sold poultry and eggs, but since locating on his present farm he has followed farming and stock raising exclusively. Mr. Turner's service in the cause of his country makes him eligible to the Grand Army of the Republic, and his name is enrolled among the members of the post at Brooklyn. Politically he casts his vote in behalf of Democratic candidates, although in no sense is he a partisan. Industrious and enterprising, Mr. Turner is highly esteemed by friends and neighbors as one who has been helpful in sustaining a high agricultural standard in Schuyler County.

TYSON, William.—Honored alike for his loyalty to his family, his friends, his country and his principles, William Tyson, the pioneer and old soldier of Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County, comes of staunch Virginia stock and of that patriotic blood which has done so much to firmly cement the nationality of the United States. He was born April 2, 1841, in a log cabin situated forty rods from his present comfortable residence in Section 11, Bainbridge Township; served bravely for four years on battlefields and enduring life in a rebel prison, and now, for four decades, has been establishing himself in the substantial domain of agricultural prosperity and in the useful activities of citizenship.

The Tyson ancestry, originally of German nativity, removed from Germany to England about two hundred and seventy-five years ago, where they remained for more than a century, when some time before the Revolutionary War, Zephaniah Tyson, the great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch, came to America, settling in Virginia. He was born in England about 1750, and there is a well-founded tradition that he served in the Revolutionary Army, finally becoming blind and dying in Virginia. Later this branch of the family removed to Ohio, about 1807, locating near McConnellsville, Morgan County, where the widow, after enduring great hardship on account of Indian disturbances, lived to be one hundred years old. Mr. Tyson's great-grandmother on the maternal side is also said to have reached about the same age.

There were three sons and one daughter of this family, the older son, Zephaniah (11.) having been born in Virginia about 1773, and is said to have served in the Indian wars under Gen. Anthony Wayne, enlisting as early as nineteen years of age, also took part in the battle of Tippecanoe in 1811, and served in the War of 1812-14. About 1797, he married Margaret DeLong, who was born in Virginia in 1779. After spending many years in Morgan County, Ohio, they came to Schuyler County, Ill., in 1831 settling in Bainbridge Township, where Mrs. Tyson died in 1842 at the age of sixty-three years, and the grandfather on July 9, 1850, aged seventy-seven. They had a family of five sons and three daughters, namely: Margaret, born April 8, 1799; Aaron, born in Virginia or Ohio, January 17, 1800, and who mysteriously disappeared; Sophia, born in Ohio, July 24, 1803, and married Daniel Berry in 1824; Zephaniah, born in Ohio October 16, 1805, married a Missouri woman, later removing to Arkansas about 1850, where he died leaving two children, a son and a daughter; Henry, born in Ohio, December 15, 1807, and married Sarah Berry; George, born in Muskingum County, Ohio, February 2, 1809; Moses, born in Ohio December 18, 1811, and married first a Miss Kelso and, as his second wife, Elizabeth Metz, on June 10, 1849, died in Missouri, January 5, 1875, his second wife dying in 1893; and Louisa, born December 28, 1813, married John Boling, and died in August, 1896.

George Tyson, father of William Tyson, left home some time before reaching his majority, first locating in Cincinnati, where after working for a time he bought a flat-boat and engaged in trading along the Ohio River. In 1820, he married Miss Lucinda Bellamy, a native of Culpeper County, Va., born in 1809. Soon after his marriage, having sold his flat-boat, Mr. Tyson invested the proceeds in a team with which, in 1831, he made the journey to Schuyler County, Ill., locating on Section 11 in Bainbridge Township. Other members of the Tyson family came to Schuyler County about the same time, some of them later moving away, and it is estimated that more than a score of their descendants are now scattered over the States of Illinois, Missouri, Michigan, Iowa, Kansas, Oklahoma, Colorado, California and Oregon. George became the owner of 480 acres of land, but becoming restless in 1866, went farther west, and all trace of him was lost. His wife survived his disappearance some ten years, dying in Schuyler County, September 10, 1876. Mr. and Mrs. George Tyson were the parents of the following named children: Charles B., born September 25, 1831, and died at home in 1852; Joel, born in 1833, died in 1850; Robert, born in May, 1835, died near Peoria, Ill., in October, 1899; Alfred, born March 4, 1837, now residing at Granite, Colo.; Melissa, born in 1839, and died at Baxter Springs, Kan., dying September 4, 1907; William, the subject of this sketch; Angelina, who lives in Jones, Okla.; Margaret, living in Bates County, Mo.; Mary, who married Z. T. Kirkham, of Schuyler County, and Levi, who resides at Abilene, Kan. Robert, of this family, married Emily Gillett, and had three children born to him; Alice, who married a Mr. Pike, and lives in Fort Madison, Iowa; Grant, when last heard from was in Louisiana; and Effie, who married and lives in Kansas City, Kan.

The early life of William Tyson was spent upon the home farm in Bainbridge Township, assisting his father and attending the district school of the neighborhood. He made good progress in his studies, and engaged in teaching when quite young. After being thus employed for several terms, he accompanied the family to Moniteau County, Mo., where the father had bought land, but which he sold, afterward moving to a farm of 300 acres in Henry County, that State. This remained the family home until the outbreak of the Civil War, when the mother and the younger members of the family returned to the old homestead in Schuyler County. It was now that William, a youth of twenty years, proved the patriotic quality of his blood. On the 27th of June, 1861, he enlisted in Company D, of the Cass County Cavalry Regiment, of Missouri Home Guard Volunteers, U. S. A., and by reason of General Order No. 25, (Paragraph Three), Department of Missouri, was discharged from service at Harrisonville, Mo., on February 28, 1862. During the first months of military experience he was one of the force which guarded the first wagon-load of provisions sent to General Lyon's army after the battle of Wilson's Creek.

home in Schuyler County, and on August 12, 1862, re-enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Fifteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for a period of three years. During this terrible season of fierce battling and weary marching he neither faltered nor shirked a soldierly duty. He was one of that little heroic band of forty-two who held their own at Buzzard's Roost Gap, Ga., against such appalling odds in August, 1864. While stationed at the block-house there, they were attacked by Wheeler's famous cavalry, but poured such a withering fire into the ranks of the horsemen as to repel their charge completely. On October 13th, Hood's army opened fire on the block-house, with both musketry and artillery, but the heroic band of Company D held off the attacking forces for ten long and bitter hours before being forced to surrender. Of the forty-two Union boys, five were killed, six wounded and thirty-one taken prisoners. Mr. Tyson being in the latter class. The prisoners were marched to Cahaba, Ala., and confined in Castle Morgan, being then transferred to Millen, Ga. On November 22d General Sherman sent Kilpatrick's cavalry to rescue them, but on the previous evening they had been loaded on cars and sent to Savannah, Ga., thence being removed to Thomasville and finally to Andersonville prison. Mr. Tyson was confined there for three months, and then transferred to Vicksburg, Miss., where he was exchanged and sent to St. Louis. In that city he received his pay and was granted a thirty days' furlough, at the expiration of which he reported at Springfield for further duty, but instead obtained his final pay and honorable discharge from the service, entering again the ranks of peace June 14, 1865.

After recruiting his weakened health as far as possible, Mr. Tyson returned to his home in Bainbridge Township, and in 1867 purchased 160 acres of land in Section 11, which has since been his home and which he has brought under a high state of cultivation, as well as rendered an attractive home. On November 10th. of that year, he was united in marriage to Miss Sarah J. Scott, who was also a native of Schuyler County, born August 29, 1850. Their happy union, however, was destined to be of short duration, for the faithful and beloved wife and mother expired on the 22d of February, 1878. She was a woman of tender heart, kindly acts and practical Christianity, and her death proved a sad blow and an irreparable loss to her family and friends. Four children were born of this union. Jesse C. Tyson, the oldest, born on August 7, 1868, is a farmer operating the old home place. He married Annie M. Hendrix, a native of Ripley, Brown County, Ill., and they have had three children: Levi Frank, born March 17, 1899, and one child who died in infancy; Orren William, born December 10, 1907. Laura, the second child, was born September 15, 1869, and is now the wife of Charles B. Ward, of Bainbridge Township, and they have four children: Ruth Eliza, born October 21, 1883; Sarah Florence, born January 9, 1896; James Rufus, August 5, 1897; William F., born June 16, 1900. Leora, born June 4, 1872, married, in 1889, James D. Dodds, and they have six children: Zelma Arvilla, born November 16, 1889, was married March 1, 1907, to Hazen F. Ward; Norris E., born March 1, 1892; Ruby E., born April 3, 1895; Giles O., born June 17, 1898; Ray Burdett, born December 16, 1900, and Edith Evaline, born December 9, 1904. Stella, born June 11, 1876, died July 12, 1876. Mrs. Sarah J. (Scott) Tyson died February 22, 1878. She was the daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth Scott.

Since fixing his home in Schuyler County, forty years ago, Mr. Tyson has devoted himself to the interests of his family, and to the high duties of a moral and intelligent citizenship. Since the story period of the Civil War, when age conferred on him the right of franchise, he has faithfully voted the Republican ticket. He has never been an office-seeker, however, and has never held any public position save that of Census Enumerator for Bainbridge Township in 1880 and in 1890. Surrounded now by those comforts of life which, in providing for others, he has guaranteed to himself; honored and loved by his children, his grandchildren, and great-grandchildren and hosts of friends for his bravery in fields of battle and in the paths of peace, and admired by his more distant associates for those practical and substantial qualities which have brought him worldly success, William Tyson is a man to be envied in no spirit of bitterness, but only in a spirit of regret that more citizens of the world are not cast in his mold of nobility.

UNGER, John C.—It is always a source of gratification to point to the growing success of our young men, for upon them rests the future prosperity of our country. Not the least prominent of the agriculturists of Schuyler County, who upon the threshold of middle life has met with a success well merited by his indefatigable labors, is John C. Unger, who owns and occupies a finely-improved farm on Section 26, Camden Township, remaining there until his death, on the same township, November 7, 1870. Ancestors of the family, both paternal and maternal, came of German extraction and were among the early settlers of Ohio, where the father, Eli Unger, was born in Portage County. Early in life he sought the larger opportunities of the undeveloped regions to the west of his home, and became a farmer in Illinois. A brother, Cyrus Unger, married Lydia Biltz and brought his bride to Illinois, where he took up land in Schuyler County in 1862. With them came the bride's sister, Mary Biltz, a native of Stark County, Ohio; in 1864 she became the wife of Eli Unger, who settled on a farm in Camden Township, remaining there until his death, on February 4, 1873. After his demise the widow returned to her old Ohio home, thence went to Indiana, but in 1875 came back to the old homestead in Schuyler County, Ill. Eventually she purchased a home in Erwin, Schuyler County, where she and her younger daughter, Belle, now reside. The elder son, Owen, is deceased. The older daughter, Cora E., married William Gray and has five children, Addra, Forrest, Roy, Jennie and Beulah; they are now living on the old Unger homestead.

Eli Unger was a cooper and when not employed at his trade, gave his attention to farming. Nor was his interest confined to his double calling. The schools received his earnest support, and the churches had his regular contributions. Movements for the material progress of the township commanded his allegiance and co-operation. For some years he served as a Director in his School District, meanwhile accomplishing much for the benefit of local educational work. In political views he was liberal, voting for the men whom he considered best qualified to represent the people and promote the general welfare. His only surviving son, John C., received such advantages as the country schools afforded, and while still quite young began to work for others. Carefully saving his wages, he was able upon attaining his majority to acquire property of his own. In May, 1891, he bought eighty acres of land on Section 26, Camden Township, where since he has made his home. At the time of purchase the farm had a small frame dwelling, sorely in need of repairs, and at the time of his marriage he rebuilt the house before bringing his bride to the home. Later he erected a substantial barn and other needed outbuildings. During 1906 he added greatly to the value of the property by erecting a two-story residence with eight rooms and modern conveniences.

The marriage of Mr. Unger took place August 20, 1895, uniting him with Miss Agnes Blanche Loring, who was born in Buena Vista Township, in April of 1877, being a daughter of William and Sarah (Grigg) Loring. After having engaged in the stock business for years, Mr. Loring died June 27, 1907, and in his demise another pioneer was taken from among those in whose midst he long had lived and labored. Since his death his widow has been a resident of the city of Rushville. Of their union there were born three daughters and one son now living, and there was also a stepdaughter, Mary, who married J. W. Lickey. The son, J. M. Loring, is engaged in the practice of law at Rushville. One of the daughters is the widow of John Avery and lives in Rushville. Another daughter, Ethel Grace, wife of Mark Sellers, met with a sad fate. Her only child accidentally fell into the cistern where the water was about three feet deep, with some ice floating on the top. The mother jumped into the cistern in a frantic effort to save the child. No one was near at the time and when found both mother and child had died from exposure to the cold water and from the struggle to climb out of the cistern.

The family of John C. Unger comprises the following-named children: Leah D., born March 8, 1897; Emory F., born November 25, 1900; Vernon William, born September 11, 1905; and Mary Grace, born May 2, 1907. The home farm comprises eighty acres and in addition, with the assistance of his sister's son, Mr. Unger operates his mother's farm of 280 acres, which has the unique distinction of having been transferred only once since the taking out of the government patent. Until the death of William Loring the latter engaged in partnership with Mr. Unger in the breeding of fine horses; in addition, Mr. Unger has made a specialty of thoroughbred registered Duroc-Jersey hogs, some fine specimens of which are always to be seen on his farm. So closely has his attention been given to farming pursuits that he has had little leisure for participation in township affairs, yet he has found time to faithfully perform the duties of School Director of his district and also has kept posted concerning problems affecting the welfare of the nation. In presidential elections he votes with the Republican party, but in local affairs he considers the character and ability of the candidate of greater importance than his views concerning issues affecting the nation, but not material to the county and township. With his wife he holds membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and has been a contributor to the missionary movements of the denomination.

UTTER, Arthur Frank.—The breeding of live-stock constitutes a science, while the dealing in them and their advantageous disposition in the markets of the country, are branches of a business whose successful prosecution requires rare executive ability, judgment and foresight. Some of the shrewdest men in the United States are engaged in the live stock business, and to be a leader in that field, as is Arthur F. Utter, of Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County, is of itself a proof of unusual determination and ability.

Mr. Utter is a native of Frederick Township, Schuyler County, born January 9, 1868, a son of George D. and Priscilla J. (Ward) Utter, his father being a man of strong character and practical abilities, whose life work is reviewed on other pages of this work. The boy was educated in the district schools of his native township, and his early life upon the home farm was spent in ways common to the sons of farmers. He remained upon the family homestead until his majority, when soon afterward he was married and settled with his young bride upon the farm in Section 12, Bainbridge Township, which he now occupies. He was obliged to borrow money to make his first payment on his place, but he went to work with determination and energy to clear the farm of debt, and not only has succeeded in that aim, but in the acquisition of other lands, in the establishment of a fine reputation as a live-stock man, and in the maintenance and education (the latter still progressing) of a large and intelligent family. He now carries on farming on 230 acres of land, and for many years has been one of the leading breeders of Poland-China hogs and Shorthorn cattle in the county. Mr. Utter is a scientific breeder, a fine judge of live stock, a careful buyer and a shrewd business manager, so that his rapid progress and high standing were foregone conclusions. He is not only a large breeder and dealer, and an extensive land owner, but has had the foresight to generously protect his family by carrying seven thousand dollars life insurance. All of the above facts are proof conclusive that Mr. Utter is a man of strong will, fine abilities, and, what is of really more importance to the true progress of American communities, of tender care for those who are dependent upon him for their support and well-being. In politics, he affiliates with the Democratic party, and takes an active interest in public enterprises which promise to advance his community.

Arthur F. Utter was united in marriage, February 27, 1889, to Miss Clara Bradman, a daughter of C. W. Bradman, who was for many years a prominent farmer and citizen of Bainbridge Township. Mrs. Utter was born in Lincoln, Neb., on the 11th of August, 1870. Her father, who is now a resident of Beardstown, Ill., served bravely in the Civil War as a member of the Ninety-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry. To Mr. and Mrs. Arthur F. Utter have been born the following children: Fred C., born September 9, 1889, who died August 8, 1892; George W., born March 2, 1891; Harry, born March 6, 1893; Charles, born November 15, 1895; Beulah, born February 26, 1898, and died December 23, 1899; Frank, born April 12, 1899, and died May 13, 1900; Thomas, December 28, 1903, and Edna, born February 10, 1907.

UTTER, George D., a well-to-do farmer, of high standing in his locality, who is living in Section 7, Frederick Township, Schuyler County, Ill., has passed more than sixty-two years in the immediate vicinity of his birthplace, in Section 6 of the same township. Mr. Utter was born November 13, 1845, a son of John and Charlotte (Brines) Utter, of whom the former was a New Yorker by birth. Henry Utter, the paternal grandfather, also of New York nativity, came to Wabash County, Ill., in 1815, where he was one of the pioneer farmers of the region, helping to organize the local administration of the county, and was a member of the lower branch of the First, Fourth and Fifth General Assemblies.

The Utter was born in Alleghany County, N. Y., November 11, 1810, and in 1815, came with his father from the East to Wabash County, Ill., where on reaching maturity he was married to Charlotte Brines, the ceremony taking place December 5, 1834. Three years later, his father having died, he moved to Schuyler County, settling on rented land, and in connection with tilling the soil, sold fanning mills then manufactured by Jesse Darnell, covering the territory between Frederick and Quincy, and in all directions from Frederick. Subsequently, he bought forty acres in Section 6, Frederick Township, on which he built a log cabin, and in that cabin the subject of this biographical record was ushered into being. John Utter applied himself vigorously to the task of improving the wild tract on which he had established his home, in Section 6. Besides this land he owned some property in the village of Frederick at the time of his death, on February 14, 1888. When he first located in Schuyler County, in 1837, he made the journey from Wabash County in a wagon, which carried all his effects. Before coming to Schuyler County he served in the Black Hawk War, and about the year 1854, organized a military company, of which he was elected Captain. The muster days of this company were gala occasions for the people of the vicinity, who were wont to gather at Pleasantview to watch the drilling maneuvers, Capt. Utter being the principal drillmaster.

Charlotte (Brines) Utter was born in Alleghany County, N. Y., April 11, 1807, and died October 15, 1887. By John Utter she became the mother of five children, namely: Edwin, Eliza, Martha, Julia A., and George D. Edwin was born in Wabash County, Ill., June 11, 1835, married Hannah Nelson and had five children, of whom four—John, Lyman, Lillie and Douglas—are living. He served as a soldier in the Civil War, enlisting from that county, and died October 16, 1903, at Quincy, Ill., where his remains now lie. Eliza was born in Wabash County, Ill., July 29, 1836. She was twice married, her first husband being James Lane, to whom she was wedded July 16, 1854, and by him she had seven children, three of whom are still living, viz.: Mrs. William E. Young and Mrs. William Patterson, both residents of Frederick Township; and Mrs. Charles Allen, whose home is in Joplin, Mo. Mrs. Lane's second husband was Samuel O. Beale. He and his wife are deceased. Martha Utter, born March 5, 1841, became the wife of William Lane and bore him one child, Sarah, who married William B. Utter, and by him had seven children. The parents of Sarah are now deceased. Julia A. Utter was born August 6, 1843, and died December 3, 1881.

George D. Utter was reared to farm life, being the only son at home. He attended the common school and assisted his father, who being an extensive landholder, required his services most of the time. He helped to do the clearing and other preliminary work, and was one of the busiest young men of his day. He remained with his parents until the time of his marriage, and even after that event had to look after the paternal farming interests as well as his own. In May, 1868, he moved to his present location, the place then containing only a log cabin, with one door and one eight-light window, but being furnished with a cook stove and fire place. Mrs. Utter understood weaving, while Mr. Utter's wife's mother was trained in carding wool, and spinning, and both parents frequently revert to the period, when after retiring for the night, the click and knock of the mother's loom kept them awake. Finally, they built a small kitchen as an addition to their cabin, which afforded them greater convenience and comfort. In course of time, the old log cabin gave place to a substantial and handsome eight-room dwelling, ample shelter was provided for the stock, and fruit and ornamental trees were set out in abundance, making a beautiful and attractive home. When Mr. Utter first took possession of this place, it was almost a wilderness and stump pulling was the first arduous and seemingly interminable task that confronted him. He well remembers the day he left the old home for the new one, not more than a mile away, and the mother's tears as she said good-bye. Since then he and his loyal and devoted wife have spent forty years in helpful companionship, sharing each other's joys and sorrows, and he has the serene consciousness that the long period intervening has been well spent. He is now the owner of 240 acres of the finest and most completely improved and highly productive land in Frederick Township, and is recognized by all as one of its leading agriculturists. His methods in farming and stock raising are thoroughly practical, and his diligent and persevering efforts have been rewarded by abundant and richly merited success.

The marriage of Mr. Utter took place March 14, 1867, on which date he was united with Priscilla J. Ward. Mrs. Utter was born April 10, 1848, a daughter of Apollus and Jane (Bramble) Ward, natives of Ohio. The Bramble family history may be found in another portion of this volume. Eight children were the offspring of this union, six of whom first saw the light of day in the crude log cabin above described. The names of the children are as follows: Arthur F., a narrative of whose career appears elsewhere in this connection; Albert M., born October 29, 1870; Alice, born September 4, 1873; Pulaski, born November 30, 1876; Amy, born January 10, 1880; Mary, born October 21, 1883; Minnie, born October 30, 1889; and Grover, born November 14, 1892. The second son, Albert, is living on the old homestead in Section 7, Frederick Township. He was married, July 8, 1894, to Helen Gregg, and they are the parents of five children, namely: Marion, Ernest, William, Helen and Clinton. Alice Utter, who became the wife of Maurice Rehman, is a resident of Chapin, Ill., and has four children—Alvin, Bert, Edith and Mabel. Full particulars concerning the Rehman family are given in their proper alphabetical order. Pulaski Utter, who was a young man of exceedingly bright promise, died January 3, 1896. Amy is the wife of John Utter, residing in Beardstown, and has one child—Roy. Mary, Minnie and Grover are still under the parental roof. All the sons and daughters of the subject of this sketch have received a good common school education, and are fitted by their mental acquirements to fill desirable positions in life.

In political action, George D. Utter has always been identified with the Democratic party, but has never sought public honors. Although repeatedly and urgently solicited to become a candidate for local office, he has persistently declined, feeling that his time was fully occupied with the duties pertaining to his farm and his family. He and his worthy wife are communicants of the Methodist Church, South, and both are held in the highest esteem by a large acquaintance, extending throughout Frederick Township.

VALENTINE, Sylvester.—Among the farmers of Woodstock Township who are investing their calling with dignity, progress and refinement of surroundings, mention is due Sylvester Valentine, the owner of a farm of 160 acres in Section 16. Mr. Valentine was born in Pickaway County, Ohio, October 10, 1845, a son of Samuel and Sophia (Young) Valentine, natives of Ohio, and of German descent. The paternal grandfather was born in a German settlement in Pennsylvania, and at an early day settled in Pickaway County, Ohio, where, after many years of tilling a prairie farm, he died rich in years and financially prosperous. His son, Samuel, father of Sylvester, came with his family to Sangamon County, Ill., about 1852, settling near the old home of Peter Cartwright, the famous Methodist Episcopal circuit-rider. Sylvester Valentine treasures vivid memories of this splendid preacher, as on many occasions he sat in church and listened to his eloquent and convincing discourses. Samuel Valentine died about 1884, his wife having pre-deceased him in 1882. Both are resting under shady trees in the little cemetery at Pleasant Plains, Ill. They were the devoted and painstaking parents of ten children, five of whom are living. Of the children, Mary is the deceased wife of William V. Campbell, of Sangamon County; Cordelia (deceased) was the wife of James E. Campbell, also deceased; Ellen is the widow of Dr. Philip Williams, and lives in Tennessee; Israel died in Jacksonville, Ill.; Sophia is the widow of Samuel Campbell, of St. Joseph, Mo.; Evelyn is the wife of Mr. David A. Hunkle; Clara died at the age of twenty-two years; India is the wife of John Kirby, and lives in Conway Springs, Kan.; and Samuel is a blacksmith in Pleasant Plains, Ill. Samuel Valentine belonged to the old time German school of thought and action, and was a devout member of the Lutheran Church, which he joined as early as 1835.

Sylvester Valentine was seven years old when he came with his parents to Sangamon County, Ill., in 1852, and he remained on the home place until his twenty-third year. He is largely self-educated, although he attended the district school with comparative regularity during the winter time, his summers being devoted to the many tasks which awaited his strength on the old place. In 1868 he rented a farm in Sangamon County, put in his first crop of corn; while on a visit to Schuyler County that winter met Sarah A. Shupe, of Woodstock Township, whom he married October 5, 1870. The Shupe family came to Illinois in 1843. Peter and Sarah (Wright) Shupe, grandparents of Mrs. Valentine, were Mormons, and they stopped in Schuyler County on their way to join their fellow religionists in Salt Lake City. On the way, Peter, his wife and their three children, were taken ill, died and were buried near Council Bluffs, Iowa. William Shupe, the father of Mrs. Valentine, then returned to Schuyler County, reaching here during the fall of 1843. On November 19, 1846, he was united in marriage to Mary Ann Hoffman, who was born in Ohio June 20, 1825. William Shupe being born in Grayson County, Va., October 9, 1824. Soon after their marriage they located on the farm now owned and occupied by the Valentine family in Woodstock Township, Schuyler County. Here William Shupe died July 8, 1904, and his wife in 1902. To them were born six children: Samuel Shupe, of Walnut, Kan.; Sarah A. (Mrs. Valentine) of Rushville, Ill.; George H., of Wayland, Ill.; Mary F., wife of Charles F. Nardin, of Macomb, Ill.; Martha M., wife of Daniel C. Nell, a farmer of the vicinity of Macomb; and William Shupe, a farmer living in Ragan, Neb.

After his marriage Mr. Valentine returned to Sangamon County, and there followed general farming until again coming to Schuyler County in 1878. He then bought eighty acres of land in Section 17, Woodstock Township, the greater part of which was covered with timber and brush, and here he labored early and late, cutting down trees and taking out stumps until he had one of the best properties in this part of Schuyler County. This remained the home of the family until 1903, when they settled on the old Shupe farm in Section 16, rich in its memories of a fine old family and their struggles to acquire a footing among the prosperous of the land. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Valentine: Lilly M., wife of Charles Newell, a farmer of Woodstock Township, who has five children—Samuel, Ray, Herman, Carl and Ruth; George W., married Daisy Brown and is living in Peoria, Ill.; Herbert E., married Maud Rittenhouse and has one son, Glenn R., and one daughter, Olive Marie, with whom, and his wife, he lives on the old homestead; and Dwight L., graduated at the Normal School in Rushville in June, 1908, and will engage in teaching the coming winter. Mr. and Mrs. Valentine are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Mr. Valentine is a Democrat in politics. He is a well informed and thoroughly practical farmer, having the respect and good will of his neighbors, and by virtue of industry, perseverance and integrity, filling a need in the general affairs of the community.

VANCIL, Benjamin F.—"A splendid farmer and citizen,"—an enthusiastic expression which everyone who has ever had any dealings with Benjamin F. Vancil would at once apply to him. His long experience and strong capabilities have carried him to the very bed-rock of agriculture, both in the raising of crops and in the breeding of live stock, and his general intelligence and moral earnestness have inspired unvarying confidence in him as a public man. For many years he has been a firm advocate of Prohibition, not only supporting its principles as measures of vital importance to the well-being of the community, but consistently voting for the candidates of the party, even when aware of the hopelessness of present victory. Many of those who opposed him in this work years ago, are now his staunchest friends. His career as a Prohibitionist has offered a striking illustration of that independence and moral stamina which are at the foundation of superior American citizenship.

Mr. Vancil was born in Woodstock Township, Schuyler County, on January 19, 1861, the son of Tobias and Caroline (Howe) Vancil, the father being reared in Tazewell County, Ill., and the mother a native of Ohio. The Vancil family are of German descent, while the ancestry of the Howes is Scotch. The mother of Benjamin F. Vancil came to Illinois with her parents and was married in Tazewell County, afterward settling in Woodstock and Birmingham Townships. After the death of the wife and mother, in the latter township, Mr. Vancil's father removed to Colchester, McDonough County, Ill., which remained the family home for some years and which was the scene of his death at the age of eighty-four. Four sons and five daughters were born to Mr. and Mrs. Tobias Vancil, namely; Amanda, now the wife of Charles Bell, a farmer of Rushville Township, Schuyler County; Eumaria, deceased; John M., a farmer located in Bainbridge Township; James Edward, who is a brickmason of Plymouth, Ill.; Laura E., wife of Oliver Davis, who lives near Bushnell, Ill.; Benjamin F.; Sarah, Mrs. Washington Smith, of Colchester, Ill.; Agnes, now the wife of Charles Riddings, of Macomb, Ill.; and Dora, deceased. Both of the parents were devout members of the old Methodist Episcopal Church. The father was a man of unassuming character, but had a natural genius as a mechanic, and was therefore peculiarly useful in a pioneer community. As he was also very accommodating, old residents of Schuyler County remember with pleasure how he was equally skilful in building a house, shaping a plow, running a sawmill, or shoeing a horse.

When the family moved to Bainbridge Township, Benjamin was but a lad, and in this section of the county he attended the district school and grew to manhood, working for his father until he had attained his majority. On December 26, 1881, shortly before this important epoch in his life, he was married to Rosanna Kelly, who was born in that township, a daughter of James and Nancy (Smith) Kelly. Her father was a native of Kentucky. (For details of the Smith family, the reader is referred to the biography of Joseph H. Smith.) After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin F. Vancil located on the farm of Joseph H. Smith, which the husband has rented for the past twenty-six years, and in the operation of which he has been remarkably successful. On December 24, 1906, Mr. Vancil bought 187 acres of land in Section 18, Bainbridge Township, which was known as the William Kuhn farm, which, added to the place rented of Mr. Smith, places him in control of 394 acres of fine land devoted partly to general farming and partly to stock-raising.

Mr. Vancil's eleven children were all born on the Smith farm, and are all living at home, namely: Grover C., January 10, 1885; James F., August 18, 1886; Robert H., July 12, 1888; Joseph F., April 29, 1890; Noah A., August 4, 1892; Ida May, August 28, 1894; Mark O., June 24, 1897; George W., February 20, 1900; Benjamin Franklin, June 22, 1903; Nancy J., October 31, 1905; and William V., February 16, 1908. A large share of the good fortune and prosperity which has attended this family is due to the unremitting care and wise management of Mrs. Vancil, to whom her husband gives due credit both for the rearing of his children and his success as a man of affairs.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Vancil are earnest and influential members of the Union Baptist Church, and are leaders in high-minded sociability and morality. As stated, he is a prominent Prohibitionist, and has always been active in educational work, having for nine years past been one of the School Directors of the Hazel Dell District No. 78.

VANDIVER, William L.—The attention of the most casual observer in passing through Brooklyn Township, Schuyler County, is attracted to the farm owned and operated by Mr. Vandiver, its thrifty appearance stamping the owner as a man of more than ordinary ability along the lines of agriculture. It was in the fall of 1899 that he located in Brooklyn Township and purchased his present farm of 158 acres on Section 29. Bringing with him the experience of many years in other localities, he came well qualified to cope with the crude conditions which he here found, and he it said to his credit that every foot of his land is now in a tillable condition.

As far back as the records can be traced, the Vandiver family is of Southern origin and it is believed that the grandfather Vandiver died in Kentucky. His wife died some years previous, and at the time of his death, his two children, John and Edward (twins), were left to the care of friends. A kind fate placed them in charge of a bachelor neighbor, James Worthington, who became greatly attached to them, and in later years, when he left Kentucky and came to Illinois, he brought the boys with him. Settling in Schuyler County, Mr. Worthington purchased considerable land in the vicinity of Brooklyn, and became one of the largest landowners in this part of Schuyler County. John and Edward Vandiver continued to make their home with their uncle, attending the schools at Brooklyn, and when they reached maturity each received forty acres of land from their benefactor. Edward Vandiver finally removed to Kansas, where he and his wife both died, their family still residing in that State. About the time of his marriage, John Vandiver traded the forty-acre tract which Mr. Worthington had given him for a farm on Section 30, Brooklyn Township, and here he erected a log cabin which was the home of the family for many years—in fact, all of his children being born in this primitive dwelling. In addition to managing his farm he worked at the carpenter's trade, and many of the dwellings that are now seen in this vicinity are the work of his hands.

The marriage of John Vandiver united him with Angeline Graham, a native of Ohio, and of the twelve children born to them mention is made of the following: The eldest child, Nelson, is a resident of Charterville, Mo.; during the Civil War enlisted his services in Company A, Seventy-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving three years. John was also a member of the same company, with his regiment passing through all of the hard-fought battles and experiencing many fatiguing marches; he is now a resident of Carthage, Ill. Henry, also a member of Company, A, Seventy-eighth Illinois, was killed at the battle of Jonesboro, Ga. Edward died in infancy. Edward (the second child of that name) grew to maturity and served one year in the cause of his country as a member of the One Hundred and Thirty-seventh Infantry; he now makes his home in Charterville, Mo. James is a resident of Atchison, Kan. Margaret, of Cummings, Kan., is the wife of Emery Andre. Louisa, the widow of Clark Quint, makes her home in Charterville, Mo. William L. is the next child in order of birth. Lizzie, of Cummings, Kan., is the widow of Robert Wright. Taylor died in Brooklyn, Schuyler County, when twelve years of age. The parents of these children both passed away in Cummings, Kan., the mother in 1887, and the father in 1891. Both were staunch adherents of the Presbyterian faith and Mr. Vandiver was a strong believer in Republican principles. During the early days of his residence in Illinois he filled many township offices within the gift of its citizens.

Born on the family homestead on Section 29, Brooklyn Township, Schuyler County, May 12, 1859, William L. Vandiver passed his boyhood in that vicinity, there being nothing out of the ordinary to distinguish his life from that of other farmer lads of his acquaintance. Up to the age of twenty-two he worked on the home farm, having in the meantime attended the district school, but after arriving at his maturity he started life independently by hiring out as a farm hand, at first receiving for his services $14 per month. Two years later, at the age of twenty-four, he assumed domestic responsibilities by his marriage, which occurred October 25, 1883, and united him with Miss Mary Wells, who was born in Brooklyn Township, the daughter of Herbert Wells. The latter, now deceased, was one of the early pioneers of Schuyler County. Following his marriage Mr. Vandiver worked by the month on the farm of Charles Worthington, but two years later rented the old home-farm of his mother-in-law, continuing its cultivation until settling upon land of his own. This was in 1889, at which time he purchased 110 acres of land in Brooklyn Township. Two years later he sold this property and removed to Webster County, Neb., there purchasing 200 acres. After disposing of that property he bought 160 acres in Phelps County, that State, but renting the property in 1899, returned to Schuyler County and entered the stock business with Charles Worthington, his former employer, in Rushville. This association lasted five months, when, in the fall of 1899, he purchased his present farm on Section 29, where, as previously noted, he now resides.

Six children were born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Vandiver, namely: Freddie, who died in infancy; Mabel, at home; Herbert and John, twins, the latter dying in infancy, and the former being now a student in Dixon College; Hally, at home; and Everett, a student in the public schools. In taking a resume of the life of Mr. Vandiver one is impressed with what he has accomplished: Starting in young manhood with nothing but an indomitable will and a determination to become a successful farmer, he at first worked as a farm hand for $14 per month. By carefully saving his earnings he was soon enabled to make investments in land, purchasing two farms in Nebraska, and by selling at an advance over the purchase price, he has realized handsomely on his original investment. Since locating on his present farm his industry has been even more liberally rewarded, the result being that he has one of the most productive farms in his section of Schuyler County. It is his belief that the best stock obtainable is the only kind to handle, a policy which he adheres to and on his farm may be seen superior specimens of imported Shire and road horses.

Not all of Mr. Vandiver's time is absorbed in looking after his own private interests, being in addition an active worker in the ranks of the Republican party. In 1906 he was nominated by that party for the office of Supervisor and elected by a good majority over one of the strongest opponents in the Democratic party. Socially he is a member of the Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America, both of Brooklyn. With his wife he is a member of the Presbyterian Church, both supporting its charities with a liberal hand, and both are held in high esteem by their many friends and acquaintances.

VAUGHAN, Silas Bruce.—The Vaughans, closely identified with the agricultural progress of Schuyler County, Ill., for more than half a century, are of an old Virginia family who migrated to Kentucky in the early 'forties. Silas B. Vaughan was but sixteen when he came with his parents to the county, and two years later began living on the farm which has ever since been his home, a period of more than fifty years. As youth and man, for these many years he has industriously, faithfully and ably performed the duties which have come to him, and now, at the age of nearly seventy years, he has reached a position of substantial comfort and the still more enviable station in life in which confidence in his honor is firmly grounded on his past. Old age can have no greater comfort than to look back at real achievement, and see in the present the reverence and affection which constitute a vindication of the past.

Mr. Vaughan is a native of Culpepper County, Va., born April 13, 1838, a son of Henry and Jael (Jones) Vaughan, both of the county mentioned. The original Vaughans were Welshmen, and the Joneses, Irish and German. The grandfathers, Venson Vaughan and Robert Jones, both died in Culpepper County. In 1844 Henry Vaughan, the father, migrated from the Old Dominion to Boone County, Ky., and in 1854 came by steamboat from Cincinnati, down the Ohio and up the Mississippi and Illinois Rivers to Schuyler County. On the 14th day of March, of that year, the family located on a farm in Bainbridge Township, now owned by Milton Campbell, where they remained for two years, in 1856 settling on the tract of 120 acres in Section 9, Bainbridge Township, which was for twenty-one years the family homestead and which afterward became the home of the son, Silas B. At that time, when he was eighteen years of age, it was covered with heavy timber and quite unimproved, and his father, with the assistance of his sons, first built a hewed log house for the family residence (sixteen by twenty feet) and then commenced to fell the trees and roll away or burn the logs. In a few years the wild forest was converted into tillable land, and the log cabin was made more comfortable for the shelter of the growing family. Here the mother died July 12, 1868, and the father, June 11, 1877. Of their ten children, four died in infancy, and the following reached maturity: Robert, now living in Oklahoma with a daughter; William, who is a farmer of Lemoine Township, McDonough County, Ill.; Elizabeth, who married, first, J. D. Rouse, and after his death, Samuel Stover, both of whom are deceased; Silas B.; Susan A., who married James T. Broadhead, a farmer, also of Lemoine Township, McDonough County; and Christopher C. Vaughan, who was last located in Omaha, Neb., but whose whereabouts have been unknown for forty years.

During his youth, Silas B. Vaughan attended the common schools of Boone County, Ky., and Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County. On November 24, 1867, he was married to Miss Mary A. Orr, born in County Fermanagh, Ireland, in August, 1839, and whose parents came to Schuyler County in the fall of that year. (For biography of Mrs. Vaughan's father, Joseph Orr, see personal sketch elsewhere in this work.) At half past six, on the morning following their wedding day, they came to the old home farm, which has ever since been their abode, and here their four children were born: The first, who died in infancy; Iona, born July 18, 1870, and married as his first wife Miss Jessie Lawler, who died January 2, 1898, and as his second, Miss Mary Dean, by whom he has had one child (Mary Louisa), the husband now farming on the old place; Otho, born September 30, 1872, and who died May 4, 1873; and Ida, who was born March 31, 1874, and is still living at home. A granddaughter, Gladys Juanita, is also making her home at the old homestead.

Mr. Vaughan now owns 170 acres in Sections 4 and 9, Bainbridge Township. It is all well improved, 100 acres having been under cultivation for fifty-three years, and the homestead is altogether one of the most comfortable and attractive in its section. Mr. Vaughan is Democratic in his political tendencies, but inclined to be liberal in his views, has neither held nor sought office.

WARD, Apollus (deceased), during his life a widely known and honored pioneer of Schuyler County, Ill., was born in Hamilton County, Ohio, July 29, 1805, a son of Uzal Ward, a former resident of the State of New Jersey and of English ancestry. The father, Uzal Ward, was born February 8, 1765, and the grandfather, Joseph Ward, was born August 25, 1734. Uzal Ward came from New Jersey to the vicinity of Cincinnati at an early day, remaining a number of years, when he removed with his family to Union County, Ind., and there spent the remainder of his life. In 1828 Apollus Ward purchased a warrant for 160 acres bounty land, issued to a soldier of the War of 1812, and bearing the signature of President James Monroe in 1817. He did not see the land, however, until the spring of 1832, when he came to Schuyler County for the first time. This being the year of the Black Hawk War, he tendered his services to the Government and, for about six weeks, was connected with the company under command of Capt. Peter Vance, but saw no fighting.

Returning to Indiana, after a period of illness, he remained there until 1835, when he married Jane Bramble, a year later coming to Illinois with his wife and an infant son. A portion of the last year, before coming west, appears to have been spent at Columbus, where their oldest son, Major Andrew, was born in 1836. Mrs. Ward also being a native of that State. On arriving in Schuyler County in September, 1836, he found things in a primitive state, his land located in Section 11 of what is now Bainbridge Township, being covered with timber, hazel brush and other wild shrubbery, requiring much labor in preparing for cultivation. His first business was the erection of a log cabin with stick chimney and puncheon floor, and furnished in the back-woods style of those days. Here he continued to reside for a period of more than forty years, with the aid of his sons, whose biographies are given on the following pages of this volume, improving and developing his property. His death occurred here March 14, 1878, his wife surviving him until July 14, 1896.

Mr. and Mrs. Apollus Ward reared a family of nine children, all except the eldest being born in Illinois. These children were Major Andrew, born August 9, 1835, married Miss Emily J. Davis, and died March 9, 1900, leaving a family of nine children: Henry M., born April 19, 1838, and twice married, having one child by the first wife, and four by the second; James Madison, born May 28, 1840, married Eliza L. Taylor in 1873 and lives on the paternal farm—has one son; Edwin Marion, born January 7, 1843, in 1867 married as his second wife Lydia J. Bridgeman, who bore him four children; Mary married William Achison, and resides in Rushville; Priscilla J., wife of George Utter, of Frederick Township, Schuyler County; Ira L. married Mary J. Taylor, by whom he has had four children and lives on a farm adjoining the home place; Emily J., deceased wife of Thomas Dodge, a farmer of Bainbridge Township, to whom she bore seven children; and Jackson, born February 19, 1856, married Miss Martha A. Dodds in 1878, has had five children and lives in Bainbridge Township.

Apollo Ward was of the sturdy type of pioneers in Schuyler County who did much by his industry and enterprise to develop that region. He was a Democrat in politics and a member of the Methodist Church, South, and his influence is perpetuated in the high reputation enjoyed by his descendants.

WARD, Edward Marion.—Schuyler County has no more interesting landmark than the farm in Section 11, Bainbridge Township, where Edward Marion Ward was born on a cold winter's day, January 7, 1843. Mr. Ward, who is now a farmer in the section adjoining that in which his childhood was passed, and who is the owner of seventy acres of land in Section 10, represents a family continuously identified with Schuyler County since the early thirties, and numerous scattered over lands radiating from the old place for a distance of eight miles. Apollo Ward occupies a prominent place among the pioneers of this section. It was he who bought a colt at a sale in Indiana, and later traded the colt at $150 for the 160 acres of land now recognized as the center of Ward occupancy in Schuyler County. He himself arrived to look over his land in 1832, and he found conditions lively enough to satisfy even the most exacting and adventurous. Black Hawk then was on the war path, and Governor Reynolds, issuing a call for volunteers, Mr. Ward tendered his services, becoming a member of the company of Captain Peter Vance. After the Indians had been driven from the State, Mr. Ward returned to his farm in Bainbridge Township, but being taken ill went back to Indiana, where he regained his health and married Jane Bramble in 1835. In 1836, accompanied by his wife and son, Major A., he came back to Schuyler County, located on the land he had acquired through exchange, and remained there for the balance of his life. For more extended family history see sketch of James M. Ward.

Farm development in the early days was necessarily much slower than at present, and when Edward Marion Ward had attained years of usefulness, there still remained much of the hard grind of land clearing, which precedes actual cultivation. He helped to cut down trees and divest the land of underbrush, attending the district schools during the winter season, and sharing in such diversions as broke the monotony of the hard working population of Bainbridge Township. February 21, 1863, he was united in marriage to Margaret Baldwin, daughter of James W. Baldwin, a native of Ohio, and early settler of Mason County, Ill. Later Mr. Baldwin moved to Schuyler County, and during the summer of 1863 located in Section 10, Bainbridge Township, which then boasted a small log cabin and an abundance of heavy timber. In the spring of 1867 he lost his first wife, and in September of the same year, married Lydia J. Bridgeman, daughter of Martin and Ruth (Caywood) Bridgeman, Southerners by birth, and pioneers of Schuyler County. Mr. Bridgeman became a widower in later life, and eventually went to Kansas, where he died at an advanced age. He was bred to the lazy, unambitious life of the South, and for a time was a slave owner, but his natural energy finally found its fitting place in the larger opportunities of the Central West. Mr. and Mrs. Ward had the following children, all of whom were born in a hewed-log cabin: Martin, Augustus, Rozzie and Edgar. Martin married Lena Nelson, who died March 26, 1906, leaving six children—Elmer, Roy, Don, Lulu, Stella and Edna; Augustus married Nellie Donaldson; Rozzie married Bessie Ballou, February 26, 1908, moving to Butler County, Kan., near Eldorado; and Edgar was killed July 11, 1904, by lightning, at the age of twenty years.

Mr. Ward bought his property soon after his marriage, it having formerly been owned by his maternal grandfather, Mr. Bramble. At first it was owned by Edward and Henry Ward, but the former soon after bought the interest of his brother, and since has devoted it to general farming and stock-raising. To his first thirty-five acres he has added as many more, and now all but eighteen acres have been cleared of the former growth of black oak and walnut. Mr. Ward was a member of the Southern Methodist Church at Mount Carmel, and has been a generous contributor to its work for many years. He has been an interested and helpful observer of the many great changes which have taken place during the sixty-five years of his life, and he delights in recalling the conditions in which his youth was set, especially well remembered being the deer trail across the old homestead. Great flocks of wild turkeys darkened the air at times, and both turkeys and deer were readily available for food for the settlers. Since its formation, Mr. Ward has been an ardent if non-active supporter of the Democratic party.

WARD, Henry M.—During the summer of 1836 the sparsely settled part of Schuyler County, Ill., now known as Bainbridge Township, claimed a new arrival in Apollo Ward, who, with his wife, Jane (Bramble) Ward, took up Government land in Section 11. In the conventional log cabin he began the struggle for existence among the hardest and least encouraging of conditions, and here, April 19, 1838, his son, Henry M. Ward, now a resident of Section 10, in the same township, was born. The lad grew strong in the outdoor life of the prairies, and when the duties of the home place permitted, attended the subscription school which had been erected on his father's farm, and which was then known as the Ward School, now the Mount Carmel School.

In his youth Henry M. Ward spent many days in grubbing stumps and chopping trees, and he became familiar with every kind of work to be found around the old place. He took naturally to tilling the soil, always has respected his calling, and naturally has succeeded at what he has found congenial and profitable. His fortunes took a different turn at the time of his marriage, March 10, 1859, to Mary Ann Bridgewater, daughter of William and Eleanor (Donohue) Bridgewater, natives of Indiana, and pioneers of Bainbridge Township. It was a small farm of forty-five acres that Mr. Ward first considered his own property, and it was located in Section 10, Bainbridge Township. It had a log cabin that his brother, Major A. Ward, had erected, and which continued to be the latter's home until he moved in 1858 to the farm where his death occurred in 1900. When Henry M. succeeded to his brother's farm directly after his marriage, he found but two acres cleared of timber, and many weeks and months were required ere an appreciable change was noted. All went well in the rude home until the death of the mother in September, 1864. There were three children of the union, of whom two died in infancy, while Elias Leander, the only survivor, who is a farmer in Rushville Township, was married and became the father of two sons and two daughters. February 2, 1865, Mr. Ward married Mary E. Buckels, who was born in Scott County, Ind., August 7, 1848, a daughter of James and Rebecca (Parker) Buckels, who came in 1856 to Schuyler County, settling in Bainbridge Township, where Mr. Buckels died September 9, 1900, his wife having pre-deceased him April 13, 1883. There were four children in the Buckels family, Mrs. Ward being the second oldest. Elisha Buckels was a soldier in the One Hundred and Fifteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was taken sick and died at the battle of Lookout Mountain; Ann S. is the wife of John Jackson, a farmer living five and a half miles southwest of Neodesha, Kans.; and James is a farmer. After the marriage ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Ward got into a wagon and drove over and took possession of their present farm, which contains ninety-five acres. Mr. Ward is engaged in general farming and stock-raising, and has a very profitable and pleasant farm. He has cleared eighty-nine acres, considerable of which is devoted to stock.

Ever since casting his first presidential vote Mr. Ward has subscribed to the principles of the Democratic party, and he has held many offices of trust and responsibility. He was Tax Collector two years, Justice of the Peace twelve years, and Supervisor for two years. His service invariably was characterized by justice and integrity, and he has been one of the most satisfactory officials in the history of Bainbridge Township. His children, both by his first and second wife, have been given excellent educational and other opportunities, and every chance has been noted and improved to make them desirable and useful members of their respective communities. Mr. Ward has the gift of making and keeping friends, and in this, his sixty-ninth year, he finds himself the recipient of the respect and affection of all who know him.

WARD, Jackson.—Schuyler County is much indebted to the Ward family, for there are none of its members who have reached maturity in this section but have contributed to its agricultural prosperity, as well as to the development of its educational and civic systems. Jackson Ward, whose farm is in Section 12, Bainbridge Township, and who is one of its most worthy representatives, is the son of Apollus Ward. (For the general family history, see the biography of James M. Ward.) Jackson Ward was reared upon the old home farm, and educated in the district school of his neighborhood until his marriage in 1876 a few months before he had reached his majority. He was born in Section 11, Bainbridge Township, on the 19th of February, 1856, and was married to Miss Martha A. Dodds, September 28, 1876. His wife, also a native of Bainbridge Township, was born July 25, 1858, a daughter of Samuel and Margaret (Wilson) Dodds, her father being an honored pioneer of the county, whose published record may be read with pleasure in connection with the biography of his son, Thomas Dodds.

Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Jackson Ward, namely: One who died in infancy; Ethel J., deceased wife of Frank Krohe, born October 11, 1877, and died June 9, 1903—was the mother of three children—Homer, Roy and Florence; Minnie, born August 31, 1882, and is living at home; Wallace, born November 27, 1884, who married Miss Annie Strong, September 1, 1906, his wife being the daughter of Thomas Q. Strong, of Bainbridge Township, and who is now operating the Strong homestead; and Vernon, born November 13, 1894, who is now living at home. The children have been given a good common school education, and are an honor to the family name.

Jackson Ward is one of the substantial men of Schuyler County, whether considered from the standpoint of worldly comfort, of substance or character. His pleasant homestead is within half a mile of his place of birth, his agricultural labors being devoted chiefly to live-stock, in connection with which, both as a raiser and dealer, he is well known. Although his entire life has been devoted to agriculture in some form, he has also taken an active part in the public affairs of the township, especially those which relate to the common school system. He is one of the Directors of School District No. 76, has held the office of Township Assessor and is otherwise identified with township government. In politics, Mr. Ward is a Democrat, and his fraternal associations are with the Modern Woodmen of America, Pleasant View Camp No. 2040. Both he and his family are members of the Methodist Church.

Mr. Ward's substantial and honorable position has not been attained except at the expense of long years of labor, self-denial and good management, his personal efforts being ably seconded by those of his good and capable wife. For four or five years after their marriage they were engaged in farming on rented land, but about 1883 Mr. Ward bought eighty acres in Section 12. Upon this dilapidated property, which had for improvements a little frame house and an old log stable, the father began making improvements and preparing the land for cultivation, while the mother gave equally energetic attention to the care and improvement of the household and its surroundings. Mr. Ward finally erected a comfortable two-story frame residence with substantial barns, and other out-buildings, introduced radical improvements in the way of drainage and tillage of the soil, and his place is now classed among the comfortable and beautiful homesteads of Bainbridge Township, being considered a suggestive illustration of its owner's substantial and enterprising character.

WARD, James Madison.—The fine live-stock farm of 160 acres, located in Section 11, Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County, Ill., and owned by the honored citizen named above, has been in the Ward family for nearly eighty years, and since 1836 has been continuously occupied as a homestead by either father or son. It is not too much to say that James M. Ward knows every inch of the farm, and that he loves it as thoroughly as he knows it. In a human way the people of the township have much the same feeling toward Mr. Ward as he has toward the old homestead; their long acquaintance with him and their substantial affection for him, based upon reliable and continuous service, have gone hand in hand these many years. He has not only furnished a fine example of a typical American farmer, but the faithfulness of a citizen who has never wearied in doing his utmost for the public, his neighbors and friends of a lifetime. For thirty consecutive years he has served in some official capacity in the township government, for the past twenty-six years of that period having been Town Clerk. His is perhaps the greatest success in life to secure friendship and confidence by faithfulness in every duty, and to retain them both unshaken, rather with increase of strength as the years pass.

James M. Ward was born on the farm he now owns and occupies on May 26, 1840, being a son of Apollus and Jane (Bramble) Ward. His father was a native of Hamilton County, Ohio, born July 29, 1805, and was in turn a son of Uzal Ward, of New Jersey, who is thought to have been of English ancestry. Apollus Ward accompanied his parents to Union County, Ind., where his father passed the remainder of his life. The former, however, had decided to migrate to lands further west, and in 1828 bought one of the many claims filed in Illinois by the soldiers of the War of 1812, or their descendants. The warrant had been signed by President Monroe in 1817 and, as intimated, covered the homestead of the Ward family in Bainbridge Township. In the spring of 1832 Apollus Ward viewed his land for the first time, and, although he was out with the soldiers of the Black Hawk War for about six weeks, he saw no fighting and returned to Indiana. He was married in 1835, and in the following year brought his wife to his timbered farm in Illinois. In addition to the timber, he found that much of the land had been covered with brush and wild plum trees, and the outlook was anything but encouraging. The first work was to build a log cabin for the wife and infant boy—the latter born in Indiana. The logs for the walls were hewn, and the bedsteads made by boring holes in the ends of the timber. Stick chimneys and puncheon floors, with split logs for seats, home-spun clothes, and all the other well known accessories of the primitive life of pioneer times, constituted some of the crude surroundings of James M. Ward's boyhood days; for he was born in this rude log cabin, as were his brothers and sisters. But despite the necessary deprivations of the times and the place, the life passed there was healthful and happy. There the parents died and their children grew to manhood and womanhood, and finally when they were called upon to make homes of their own settled within three miles of the old farm.

The children of the family have been as follows: Major A. Ward, now deceased and the only one born in Indiana, who married Emily J. David and had a family of nine children; Henry, a farmer of Bainbridge Township, who had one child by a first marriage and four by a second; James M.; Edward Marion, who has had three children by a second wife; Mary, wife of William Acheson and a resident of Rushville; Priscilla J., who married George Utter, a Frederick Township farmer; Ira L., who lives with his wife (nee Mary J. Taylor) and his four children on a farm adjoining the home place on the east; Emily J., deceased, formerly the wife of Thomas Dodge, a farmer of Bainbridge Township, by whom she had seven children; and Jackson Ward, a farmer of the same township, who has a family of three children.

As stated the father came to Schuyler County in 1836 and settled on his farm in Section 11, Bainbridge Township, where the children were reared. As they developed to maturity and married he helped them in every possible way, and his death, March 14, 1878, bereft them of the best friend and the wisest counselor of their lives. Apollus Ward was not only tender and generous in all his family relations, but his services in the development of educational and religious privileges were highly valued by the community at large. He was very active in the building of churches and schools, donating considerable land for both of these purposes, and being especially remembered as the founder of Ward School No. 1, and the Southern Methodist Church. The mother of James M. Ward, a good woman, who shared with the father the gratitude and affection of the family, died on the old homestead July 14, 1895.

Joseph Ward, the great-grandfather, was born August 25, 1734, Uzal Ward, the grandfather, February 8, 1765, and Apollus Ward, the father, July 29, 1805. On October 13, 1906, the descendants of Joseph Ward held a reunion at Mount Carmel Church, and mustered 172 strong. Of the nine children born to Apollus Ward two are deceased and seven are honored residents of Schuyler County, residing, as stated, within three miles of the old family homestead.

James M. Ward, the third of the family, has spent his entire life of sixty-seven years upon the home farm. In his boyhood he attended the district school, and assisted his father in all his duties until the latter's death in 1878. On March 14, 1873, he wedded Mrs. Eliza (Sisk) Saylor, and their only child, Charles, was born December 28, 1873. Charles Ward married Laura Tyson October 26, 1892, his wife being born in Bainbridge Township September 15, 1869, the daughter of William T. Tyson, an honored citizen of that township. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Ward, with the dates of their birth are as follows: Ruth E., October 21, 1893; S. Florence, January 5, 1896; James R., August 10, 1898; and William F., June 16, 1901. The son mentioned above is now in active charge of the old home farm, and promises to maintain the family name to its full integrity and honor.

James M. Ward continues with ardor and good judgment the work so well begun by his father in the fields of education and religion. His continuous public service of thirty years as Collector and Town Clerk also has earned him a strong claim upon the gratitude of the township, which its citizens have always freely accorded him. Mr. Ward has been a lifelong Democrat. Although not a church member, he has responded with cordiality and liberality to all calls for the support of meritorious causes, and his life has been a long round of useful, helpful and charitable deeds.

WARD, Major Andrew (deceased), formerly one of the prosperous and greatly respected farmers of Bainbridge Township, Schuyler County, Ill., where his busy, upright, public-spirited and useful life covered a period of sixty-five years, was born in Columbus, Ohio, August 9, 1825, a son of Apollus and Jane (Bramble) Ward, natives of that State. When a child Mr. Ward was brought to Schuyler County by his parents, the family arriving in the county in September, 1836, and settling in Bainbridge Township in the same section where Jackson Ward now lives. In boyhood days, he attended the district school, remaining at home until the wild land had been cleared of timber and brush, and converted into a productive farm. In 1858, he located on the place in Section 10, Bainbridge Township, where he was successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits for forty-two years. He departed this life March 9, 1900, being the owner of more than 400 acres of land, as the result of his energy, diligent application, sagacious management and unswerving rectitude of conduct. He was one of the foremost farmers of his locality, being also eminently serviceable in his public relations as a member of the community with which his career was so long identified. He was a man of warm and generous nature and his kindness to those in distress was proverbial. In all walks of life, he bore himself creditably and honorably. His civic sentiment was earnest and practical, and he took a deep interest in all measures that pertained to the development and prosperity of the township and county. In politics, he was a Democrat and filled various local offices with commendable fidelity and efficiency, bearing the reputation of a model citizen.

The marriage of Mr. Ward took place April 6, 1856, on which date Emily Davis became his wife. Mrs. Ward, who still survives, is a woman of the highest character, and enjoys the sincere respect and cordial regard of her extended acquaintance. Her birth occurred in a little log cabin on the farm now owned by Charles K. Strong in Section 1, Bainbridge Township. She is a daughter of Edward and Irene (Carter) Davis, natives of Athens County, Ohio, whence they moved in 1835 to Schuyler County, Ill., making their home on the spot just mentioned, where their daughter, Emily, was born March 9, 1842. Mrs. Davis died in October of that year, and thus Mrs. Ward never knew from personal experience what it was to be blessed with the love and tender care of a mother. Mr. and Mrs. Davis became the parents of three sons and one daughter, namely: Elias, Sylvanus, Cyrus and Emily. Elias Davis is a farmer in Miami County, Kans.; Sylvanus also moved to that county and there died March 14, 1905; and Cyrus, who was a soldier in the Civil War, enlisted in Company G, Twenty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was killed in battle October 5, 1862.

After the death of his wife Mr. Davis sold the old farm in Section 1, and moved to a piece of land which he had purchased in Section 10, in the same township, which is now Mrs. Ward's place of residence. Later, her father married a second time, wedding Keziah Stevens, who bore him two children: Caroline, who is the widow of Lewis Elam, and lives at Ottawa, Kan.; and Mary, who died at the age of nineteen years. Mr. Davis died in August, 1852. He was an educated man, had been a close student and was thoroughly fitted for the practice of medicine, but changing his purpose, turned his attention to an agricultural life. Politically he was a Democrat, but had no ambition for the distinction of public office. He took an earnest and unselfish interest in the welfare of the community, heartily supported charitable enterprises and habitually extended kindly aid to the unfortunate. His noble traits of character won the friendship and esteem of all who knew him. He was a member of a worthy family, grandfather Reuben Davis, a Hollander by birth, having come from his native land to America about the time of the Revolutionary War. The latter settled in what is now the State of Ohio, then a part of the Northwest Territory, and there spent his last days. The maternal grandmother, whose maiden name was Carter, was born in England, and on crossing the Atlantic, also became a resident of Ohio, whence in course of time she moved to Schuyler County, Ill., and died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Wesley Parker.

Nine children resulted from the union of Andrew Ward and Emily Davis, as follows: Edward, born June 13, 1857; Irene, born March 19, 1860; Cyrus, born February 10, 1862; James, born August 12, 1865; George E., born August 12, 1867; Robert, born May 22, 1870; Ezra, born May 22, 1872; Cora, born August 20, 1880; and Clarence, born May 15, 1885. The oldest son, Edward Ward, who is a farmer in Bainbridge Township, married Hannah M. Scott, by whom he had one child, Zebna. Irene, deceased, was the wife of Pulaski Reeves, and left a daughter who married Clarence Robinson, a farmer. Cyrus, who follows farming in Cowley County, Kan., married Josie Somaster, and is the father of four children,—Clinton, Wilbur, Olie and Frank. James Ward, a farmer of Bainbridge Township, is the husband of Estella Persinger, and they have four children,—Bettie, Ralph, Della and Irene. George E. Ward, a resident of Huntville, Ill., married Sophronia Johnson, by whom he has three children,—Otis, Lelia and Brook. Robert Ward, a farmer in Bainbridge Township, married Ruth Hatfield, and has one child,—Vail. Ezra Ward, who farms in the same township, is the husband of Ada Gregg, who has borne him five children,—Earl, Viola, Olive, Gladys and Herman. Cora Ward, who died April 23, 1906, was the wife of Henry Ambrosius, and left one child,—Carl Clayton. Clarence Ward is the owner and operator of the old home farm in Section 10, Bainbridge Township, which he keeps in perfect condition. The second daughter, Cora, was a graduate of the Rushville and Normal Colleges, and later, finished a course in stenography and typewriting. For two years, she held the office of Deputy County Clerk of Schuyler County, and for an equal period (until September 27, 1905) was a bookkeeper and stenographer in the Bank of Schuyler County.

The father of this interesting family was a man whose kindly suggestions and wise counsel many of the younger men of the township have often heeded with substantial profit to themselves, and his memory is warmly cherished by scores who were the recipients of his generous benefactions.

WEAVER, Samuel, has lived in Schuyler County, Ill., almost three score and ten years, and his experience nearly covers all the stages of the county's development from a wild and desolate region to its present material, moral and intellectual status among the communities of the State. Not many of the contemporaries of his childhood still remain to share with him his reminiscences of early days. He was born in Littleton Township, Schuyler County, February 23, 1838, and is a son of John and Polly (Fowler) Weaver, natives of Kentucky and Tennessee, respectively. His grandparents were Samuel and ——— (Bollinger) Weaver, and Isaac and Elsie Fowler. The marriage of John Weaver and Polly Fowler took place in the South, and in 1830, they traveled northward by wagon to a point near Springfield, Ill., where they sojourned for a year, then moving to the vicinity of Rushville, Schuyler County, and after spending another year there, locating in Section 19, Littleton Township. John Weaver entered up a tract of 160 acres of Government land, most of which was covered with timber or brush, and after clearing and improving the place, followed farming many years, adding in the course of time 30 acres to his original pre-emption. On this farm he died in April, 1876, Polly (Fowler) Weaver, the companion of his pioneer toil, having passed away about the year 1851. He was married a second time, wedding Parnissa Morrison, whose death occurred in 1893. John Weaver was the father of six sons and four daughters by his first marriage, of whom the subject of this personal record is the sixth in order of birth. Isaac died in infancy, and six are still living, as follows: Mrs. Cyrus Fowler, a widow, residing in McDonough County, Ill.; Peter Weaver, whose home is in Brooklyn Township, Schuyler County; Mrs. Richard Ban Bevers, a widow living at Littleton, Ill.; Samuel, to whom the present writing pertains; Mrs. R. B. Daniels, a widow, of Littleton Township; and Mrs. William Chockley, a resident of Kansas, living at Iola. In politics, the head of this family was a Democrat, and in religion, a Primitive (or Old School) Baptist.

Samuel Weaver was reared on the paternal farm, receiving his education mainly in the subscription schools. He remained with his parents until the time of his marriage, after which he lived one year in McDonough County. At the end of this period he moved to Brooklyn Township, Schuyler County, and was domiciled one year in the old schoolhouse, subsequently occupying various places in the township. For three years, he and his wife were residents of the village of Brooklyn, where he owned a house and three lots, which he sold. In 1876, he bought his present farm of 120 acres in Section 23, Brooklyn Township, having had a lease of the property for five years previous to becoming its owner. Only a small portion of the place was cleared,—about ten acres. He has removed the brush and timber from 80 acres, adding more land to his original purchase, until he now has 200 acres,—160 being in Section 23, and the rest in Section 26. Besides general farming, he has devoted his attention to raising horses, cattle, sheep and hogs. Since 1905, he has lived somewhat in retirement, attending to that portion of his land which is in meadow, but rearing out the part under cultivation. He has 40 acres of solid timber in Section 26; and 40 acres in Section 23, three-quarters cleared.

The marriage of Mr. Weaver took place October 5, 1857. Adelia H. Daniels, a woman of admirable traits of character, becoming his wife. Mrs. Weaver was born in Rushville Township, Schuyler County, September 17, 1838, and is a daughter of Paul and Lydia (Manlove) Daniels, natives of North Carolina, where also originated her maternal grandparents, William and Nancy Manlove. The father and mother of Mrs. Weaver settled near Rushville, Schuyler County, at an early period, Mr. Daniels owning 120 acres of land in Brooklyn and Littleton Townships. He departed this life in 1900, his wife having passed away in 1894. Seven children resulted from the union of Mr. and Mrs. Weaver, as follows: Eldridge, born August 13, 1858, whose business is that of a traveling salesman; Alpheus, born March 11, 1860, who lives in Brooklyn Township; Georgietta, born February 1, 1862, deceased June 17, 1869; Everett, born October 5, 1864, whose home is in Lemoine Township, McDonough County, Ill.; Orville, born October 11, 1872; Delorious, born January 1, 1874; and Cornelia, born November 5, 1877. The last three are at home. The names of the three deceased brothers of Mr. Weaver are,—Harrison, who died in 1878, at the age of 78 years; Thomas, who died in 1894, aged 65 years; and Joseph, whose death occurred in 1885, when he was 30 years old.

In politics, Mr. Weaver is identified with the Democratic party, and has served on the township board and the central committee of his party. His religious connection, as also that of his estimable wife, is with the Primitive Baptist Church, in which he has officiated as deacon since 1887. He and Mrs. Weaver are deeply respected by all who know them.

WEBSTER, John L.—Among the leading men whose residence in Rushville and vicinity is of long standing, and who are esteemed alike for their worthy traits of character and the good influence they have exerted while promoting the best interests of the community, none are better known than John L. Webster, by occupation a contractor and builder. Mr. Webster was born in Oakland Township, Schuyler County, Ill., October 14, 1845, a son of Thomas Mathew and Susan (Hills) Webster, the former of whom was born in England, as was also his father, Mathew Webster. At Marylabone Church, London, Mathew Webster was united in marriage to Hester Miller, born in Gloucestershire, England, and who became the mother of Henry Mathew, Nancy, Thomas Mathew and George Mathew Webster. Of this family Henry Webster only failed to come to the United States, and his present whereabouts are unknown, his last address having been Adelaide, Australia. Mathew Webster, Sr., was a sailor by profession, and in this capacity put into many ports and traversed many seas. His nautical career was brought to a close because of a fractured leg, and his daughter, Nancy, has a snuff box, made from a piece of wood taken from his ship. Nancy married John Schoder, in the north of England, but now lives in the United States. Thomas Mathew Webster was a carpenter by trade, but followed farming as an alternate occupation. He came to America as a young man, settling in Illinois, where he met his future wife, and where his death occurred in 1849, his wife surviving him until 1873. They were the parents of the following children: John L.; William, of Grundy County, Mo.; and Mathew, who was killed by a live wire in October, 1903, at Elmwood, Ill.

John L. Webster enjoyed the advantages of the public schools of Buena Vista Township, and in 1869 began learning the trade of carpentering with Amos Sylvester, a well known contracting builder of Rushville. Possessing marked mechanical skill, he developed into a master workman, and in time enjoyed a large patronage in different parts of the county, erecting dwellings, barns, outbuildings and doing general carpenter work. At the present time he has a continually increasing business, and although having reached sixty-two years of age, is still vigorous and active, taking as much pleasure in the accuracy and excellence of his work as when it was a new and necessary resource. In the town and county are many monuments to his skill and artistic ability, and he has contributed a large and commendable share toward the making of his pleasant and thrifty surroundings.

The first wife of Mr. Webster formerly was Ellen R. Montgomery, daughter of Clayton and Julia (Morris) Montgomery, natives of Kentucky, and early settlers of Schuyler County. The brothers and sisters of Mrs. Webster were as follows: Nathan S., of Rushville; Martha, wife of L. W. Sloat, of Rushville; Melvina, wife of William McCrady, of Fort Madison, Iowa. Mrs. Webster died April 11, 1895, and March 21, 1897, Mr. Webster was united in marriage to Margaret V. Fields, a native of Virginia, and born February 21, 1866, a daughter of George I. and Ellen P. Fields, the former editor of the Versailles (Ill.) Enterprise. In early life Mrs. Webster was converted and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which she ever after was a most devout member. Her sudden death, January 1, 1907, was entirely unexpected, as the night before she had appeared in excellent spirits and had entertained friends at her home. During the early hours of the following morning her husband was aroused by her heavy breathing, and she sank into unconsciousness, from which the best medical aid procurable failed to arouse her. She passed painlessly away at 1 o'clock the same afternoon, and was buried January 3, with the service of the church to which she was so devoted. The first Mrs. Webster was the mother of the following children: Harry, who married Frances K. Farrer and has two children, Beryl and Vaugh; Clayton M., of Chicago, Ill., who married Etta Severns and has one son, Wayne; Nellie G., wife of Harry Fritzell, connected with the rural free delivery out of Rushville; Susan, who married Edward Henley and has two sons, Paul and Ray, being afterwards married to Charles Tacke, of Springfield, by whom she had one son, Charles J.; and Juliette, wife of Harvey K. Allen, in the office of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad at Kansas City, Mo., and mother of Hazel and Nellie Allen.

In politics Mr. Webster is a staunch adherent of the Democratic party, and he has been closely identified with its local undertakings. He now is filling his sixth term as Justice of the Peace, aggregating in all a period of twenty-four years, formerly having served as Town Trustee and Alderman of the First Ward of Rushville. In religion he is a Baptist and fraternally is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Few men in Rushville and the surrounding country are unfamiliar with the name of John L. Webster, and he commands the respect and good will of all classes of people.

WEIGHTMAN, William.—Within the present limits of the city of Indianapolis, Ind., where now stand city homes with every modern convenience, more than seventy-five years ago there stood a log cabin surrounded by 120 acres of land, the typical homestead of a pioneer, struggling to earn a livelihood for his family. In this little home was born William Weightman January 27, 1826, and all of his early associations cluster around that Indiana farm, where his parents, Robert and Temperance (Arnold) Weightman, endured the vicissitudes incident to frontier existence. The father, a native of Sheffield, England, had immigrated to the United States about 1824 and had settled in Marion County, Ind., where he met and married Miss Arnold, a native of Pennsylvania. When their eldest son, William, was a boy of thirteen years, they removed to Illinois in 1839 and settled on Section 21, in Camden Township, Schuyler County, where the father secured 320 acres in one body, besides acquiring 120 acres where William now makes his home.

During the first few years of the family's residence in Illinois there occurred nothing to discourage their ambitious hopes. Hardships were many, but the true pioneer never allowed himself to be disheartened by them. However, after a number of years death came to break up the happy family circle, taking from the home the self-sacrificing and devoted father. It was in the summer of 1846 that his death occurred and in April of the following year the widow returned to her old home near Indianapolis, where she died about 1848. There were six sons and two daughters in the family, but the first-born alone survives. After the death of the father he took charge of the land, which had no buildings excepting a log cabin and a log stable.

The marriage of William Weightman and Martha J. Brown was solemnized May 27, 1847. For more than sixty years they have been spared in happy married life and, by industry and cheerful optimism, they have been a blessing, each to the other, and both to their children and their large circle of friends. In their present comfortable home, surrounded by those conveniences that contribute to the welfare of mankind, they look back over a long vista of years and delight to recount to their descendants stories of the early days. It was the mother's duty to spin the wool and weave the cloth from which were made the garments worn by the children. Often her work kept her busy until late at night, and to secure a light by which to sew was no easy task. Tallow candles had not yet become common, and she provided a substitute by scraping out a turnip and filling the hole with lard and a wick. When candles were brought first to the home all were delighted with them, nor was the later change to kerosene received with less pleasure. Since then they have witnessed the evolution of gas and electricity, so that their long lives practically have comprehended the development of all the modern methods of lighting.

The wife of William Weightman was born in Morgan County, Ill., September 14, 1829, a daughter of John and Sarah (Points) Brown, by whom she was brought to Schuyler County in 1832, and since that year her home has been in Camden Township. Of her ten children all but one were born in the little log cabin that stood on the farm. Inheriting a vigorous mentality and sturdy constitutions from their parents, they aided materially in the upbuilding of the family fortunes and their labors received due recognition from their parents who deeded to them portions of the farm of 440 acres, reserving for their own use the 100 acres on which they began housekeeping. There are now thirty-three grandchildren and nineteen great-grandchildren, all of whom unite in giving to the aged couple veneration and thoughtful care.

Of the ten Weightman children, Sarah T. died at fourteen years of age and John at thirty-nine; Nancy A. is the wife of Alouzo Belldon, a farmer of Camden Township; Lizzie married J. R. Lawson, also a farmer of Camden Township; Charles, who married Sarah Starkweather, lives near the old homestead; William, who married Lillie Starkweather, is engaged in farming at Kiowa, Okla.; Mrs. Maria J. Auld and her husband, Rev. Auld, both deceased, are survived by two sons, Carl and Charles Auld; Jennima is the wife of John W. Marlow, a farmer of Camden Township; Laura May (Mrs. Henry Heicherman) is living in Spokane, Wash.; and Sophia G. is the wife of Henry Marlow, a farmer of Camden Township.

Into the lives of Mr. and Mrs. Weightman religion has brought its ennobling and elevating influence. From the early days they have been earnest members of the Methodist Episcopal Church and, as far as possible, have been active in Sunday-school and church work. Their home was the headquarters of the circuit-riders in the days when they were prominent in the development of the church. Often religious meetings were held in the Weightman log cabin, but after a schoolhouse was built, meetings were usually held there until a house of worship was erected. When the quarterly conferences were held the latch-string of the Weightman cabin was hung on the outside and no visitor was refused entertainment. Although there were only two beds in the house, as many as nine guests were often entertained overnight. The ministers who came as guests showed the same cheerful acceptance of circumstances, and the same appreciation of hospitality that those pioneer preachers displayed in every event of their self-sacrificing careers; so that, crowded though the pioneer home might be, the departure of these itinerants was always a source of regret to the family into whose isolated lives they brought renewed religious zeal and the joy of uplifting companionship. In the twilight of his useful life Mr. Weightman quietly but often turns toward the past, reflecting upon the changes which it has been his lot to witness,—the building up of churches, the improvement of farms, the growth of his community, the development of thriving villages, and the many other transformations which time has wrought. Politics has interested him to a considerable degree and he has given his support to principles supported by the Democratic party; yet he is not narrow in his political views, being a man of liberal opinions and broad ideas. Long after he and his wife shall have been called from the scenes of earth, their memory will be green in the hearts of their descendants, and their names will be recorded in the annals of the township, in the development of which they have ever proved active and efficient co-workers.

WEINBERG, Moses.—The enterprise which imparts to the city of Rushville, Schuyler County, Ill., its principal commercial activity, and invests the place with a large proportion of its tone and prestige as a business center, is the stock yards there located. The master spirit of this busy mart of trade is the gentleman to whom this writing pertains, and it is his acumen, broad mental grasp and tireless energy that furnish the key-note of success in one of the most important undertakings in that section of the State. The name of Moses Weinberg is associated far and wide with the extent and magnitude of the operation of the Rushville stock yards.

Mr. Weinberg was born in Augusta, Hancock County, Ill., in 1859. His father and mother, Simon and Louisa (Juergens) Weinberg, were natives of Germany. Simon Weinberg, who was a merchant by occupation, came to the United States when he was 20 years of age. At first he located in Pittsburg, Pa., and from that city went to Cincinnati, Ohio. In 1856 he established his home in Augusta, Ill., where he was engaged in the merchandise business until 1875, when he retired from active pursuits. He departed this life in June, 1901, his wife having passed away in October, 1896. They were the parents of eighteen children, thirteen of whom are living.

In early youth, Moses Weinberg attended the public schools of Augusta, Ill., and completed his education at Knox College, in Galesburg. His first occupation after finishing his studies was in the line of butchering and stock dealing. In 1897 he left Augusta and located in Rushville, Ill., where he identified himself with the trade of the stock yards. In this connection, his career has been one of phenomenal success. Through his dominating influence these yards have not only held the stock trade of the neighboring townships, that naturally tends to Rushville, but have attracted much of the marketing breeders in McDonough and Brown Counties, for a distance of twenty-five miles. The arrangements and facilities of the yards are such, through Mr. Weinberg's sagacious manipulation of matters, that farmers ordinarily obtain better prices, besides the saving of transportation and other expenses incident to shipping elsewhere on their own account. The thorough knowledge of details acquired by him in twenty-five years' experience in this branch of trade, has enabled Mr. Weinberg to be of inestimable service to the stock farmers who patronize him, at the same time subserving his own interests to a highly profitable degree. His personal transactions in live stock amount to more than $400,000 annually, his own yards are three acres in extent, and his sheds will accommodate 30 car loads of stock. The stock shipments of the Rushville yards sometimes require five extra trains weekly. Mr. Weinberg's name is familiar as a household word to all stock raisers in Schuyler County, by whom it is recognized as a synonym of fair dealing and equitable treatment. He maintains a hospitable home, and entertains his guests in a most genial and cordial manner.

On April 24, 1886, Mr. Weinberg was united in marriage in Birmingham Township, Schuyler County, with Flora Bolton Hobbie, a daughter of John C. and Elizabeth Bolton, who was born in the State of Pennsylvania. Seven children have resulted from this union, namely: Nina, Margaret, Simon, Flora, Elizabeth, Jacob Herbert and Solomon. Mrs. Weinberg has one son, Arthur Hobbie, by a previous marriage.

In politics, Mr. Weinberg is a supporter of the Democratic party, although the exacting duties of his extensive business forbid any active participation in political affairs.

WELLS, William, who is the owner of one of the largest and best improved farms in Schuyler County, Ill., on which he has pursued his wonted occupation for a number of years, is a native of the locality where he now resides, being born in Littleton Township, Schuyler County, September 30, 1853. Mr. Wells is a son of Rensselaer and Rebecca (Rose) Wells, the birth of the father having occurred in Ohio, and that of the mother, in Kentucky. They were the parents of six sons and one daughter, of whom the subject of this personal record is the third in order of birth. Until Mr. W. Wells reached the age of eighteen years, he was a pupil in the Garrison district school, and a member of the home circle. At that period he began farming for himself on his father's place, and in course of time became the owner of 520 acres of land, of which 360 acres lie in Oakland Township, and the remaining 160 acres, in Littleton Township. In 1896 he moved to his present location in Section 25, Littleton Township, where in 1899, he built a story-and-a-half frame house, containing eight rooms and a cellar. About 200 acres of his farm are under cultivation and 55 acres are timber land, the rest being left for grazing. He is engaged in diversified farming, and besides his general operations, devotes considerable attention to raising Aberdeen cattle, feeding from 80 to 100 head per year. He is a man of vigorous, enterprising and progressive nature, and all his undertakings have been attended by profitable results.

On January 8, 1895, Mr. Wells was united in marriage with Martha Blodgett, who was born in Frederick Township, Schuyler County, Ill., April 11, 1868, where in girlhood, she received her education in the district schools. Mrs. Wells is a daughter of Ira and Hannah (Garrison) Blodgett, natives of Vermont and Ohio, respectively. Her paternal grandparents, Harvey and Lavina (Arnold) Blodgett, were Vermonters by nativity, while Lewis and Martha (Van Horn) Garrison, her grandparents on the maternal side, were born in Ohio, their parents having come from Germany at an early date in the last century. Four children have resulted from the union of Mr. and Mrs. Wells, as follows: William Clarence, born February 29, 1896; Carl Roscoe, born May 9, 1899; Lewis B., born August 25, 1901; and Anna Mary, born December 27, 1902.

In politics, Mr. Wells is a supporter of the Democratic party, although not active in political contests, and entertaining no ambition for public office. He takes, however, an intelligent and discriminating interest in civic affairs, and is faithful to all the obligations recognized by a dutiful and useful citizen. Mrs. Wells is a woman of much amiability and worthy traits of character, and enjoys the cordial regard of numerous friends.

WELLS, Randolph R., a well known general farmer and stock-raiser of extensive landed possessions and high reputation, has pursued his wonted calling in Oakland Township, Schuyler County, Ill., for thirty-five years. He was born in Littleton Township, in the same county, May 18, 1847, a son of Rensselaer and Rebecca (Rose) Wells, natives of Ohio and Illinois, respectively. The paternal grandfather, Charles Wells, after the death of his wife, the grandmother of Randolph R., moved to Rushville, Ill., where he died. Rensselaer Wells was born in Lorain County, Ohio, February 22, 1823, and his wife, Rebecca (Rose) Wells, was born in Morgan County, Ill., August 28, 1826. The former came to Illinois in 1834 with his father, settling in Littleton Township, Schuyler County. Rebecca Rose came to Schuyler County with her parents, who were also natives of Lorain County, Ohio, whence they first moved to Morgan County, Ill., afterwards becoming leading citizens of Schuyler County. The marriage of the young people took place in Littleton Township, in 1844. The father died March 22, 1905, his wife having passed away March 28, 1896. Rensselaer Wells was a model farmer and exemplary citizen. Starting out early in life with nothing but a determination to succeed, he followed farming until he became one of the most extensive landholders in Littleton Township, owning at one time about 560 acres. In politics, he was a staunch Democrat, and took an earnest interest in the affairs of the township and county, filling various public offices. He was a member of the Board of Supervisors from Littleton Township. Impelled by generous sympathies, he was ever ready to lend a helping hand to the needy, and prompt to contribute to every worthy cause. He enjoyed the esteem and confidence of all who made his acquaintance. Of the family to which he belonged, but one member is left, Mrs. McGinnis, a resident of Princeton, Ill. Rebecca (Rose) Wells, wife of Rensselaer Wells, came of a family of excellent standing, her father, Randolph Rose, being one of the most prosperous and prominent farmers of his locality. Six children were the result of their union, as follows: George W., a retired farmer now living in the village of Littleton, Ill.; Randolph R.; John William, a farmer, of Littleton Township; David D., a resident of Quincy, Ill.; Charles D., who lives in Littleton Township; and Mary Alice, who married Aaron Danner, a farmer of this township, living on the old farm first operated by Grandfather Charles Wells in 1834.

Randolph R. Wells was reared to farm life in Littleton Township, attending the district schools in the vicinity of his home and assisting in work on the farm. He remained on the home place until the time of his marriage, being then about 25 years old. Immediately after this event, he located on a farm of 160 acres which he had previously purchased in Section 30, Oakland Township, known as the "Billingsly farm." It was wild land, and he first devoted his attention to clearing it of timber and brush, and preparing it for cultivation. In the years succeeding, he has finely improved the property, and now has one of the most attractive homes in the township, having built a spacious and comfortable residence, 54 by 54 feet in ground dimensions, and put up other buildings of corresponding durability and convenience. To his original purchase he has added, at intervals, until he is now the owner of 404 acres in one body, all lying in Oakland Township. Through energy, integrity and wise management, he has acquired a handsome competency, and is recognized by all as one of the leading agriculturists of Schuyler County.

The marriage of Mr. Wells took place January

31, 1883, on which date Emma D. Ellis became his wife. Mrs. Wells, who is a woman of superior intelligence and excellent traits of character, was born in Oakland Township, August 28, 1862, a daughter of James and Margaret Ellis, natives of Kentucky. Further particulars in regard to the history of her family may be found in a biographical record of James D. Ellis, appearing on another page of this volume. Mr. and Mrs. Wells have had four children, as follows: Laura, born April 6, 1884; Jesse E., born January 10, 1887; Nina, born October 3, 1890; and Roy R., born June 7, 1894. Laura is the wife of Jay True Dodds, a farmer of Littleton Township, by whom she has one child, Maxine. Jesse E., who has received an education fitting him for almost any position in life, is in charge of the home farm. Nina died in infancy; and Roy R. died at the age of four years. The mother of this family is a communicant of the Christian Church, and while the father is not a church member, he has contributed liberally from his ample means towards the support of evangelical work, besides being a generous promoter of all enterprises designed to advance the best interest of the township and county. In politics, Mr. Wells is a Democrat, but has never sought political preferment, having, on the contrary, steadfastly declined to become a candidate for public office. He is one of the foremost figures in the rural life of Schuyler County.

WHEAT, John (deceased), was, at the time of his death, one of the oldest farmers and stock-raisers in Schuyler County, Ill., his arrival in the county dating back to the early years in the history of the county, and his long-extended life covering all stages of the development of this region from a barren wild to its present prosperous condition. Mr. Wheat was a native of the State of Kentucky, where he was born January 6, 1817, a son of Joseph H. and Mary A. (Cecil) Wheat, also Kentuckians by nativity. He was brought by his mother with other members of the family to Schuyler County, in 1830, his father having died in Kentucky. His mother finally passed away in Schuyler County.

Mr. Wheat was reared to the life of a farmer, and on attaining his maturity, located in Littleton Township, where he followed farming for a number of years on land which he rented, afterwards buying farms in several different localities, at intervals, on which he pursued his wonted vocation with uniform success. Ultimately, disposing of his farming interests, he withdrew from active pursuits, and on March 1, 1902, purchased a home in the village of Littleton, where he took up his residence, and where his worthy and respected widow now lives.

The marriage of John Wheat took place June 9, 1842, on which date he was joined in wedlock with Julia Snyder, who was born in Hancock County, Ky., July 29, 1822. Mrs. Wheat is a daughter of David and Cassandra (Walker) Snyder, natives of the Blue Grass State. Her parents journeyed from Kentucky to Illinois in 1830, settling in Littleton Township, Schuyler County. David Snyder was a farmer by occupation, and became the owner of hundreds of acres of land, which he entered from the Government. He was accounted one of the substantial farmers and prominent citizens of his day. Fourteen children resulted from the union of John Wheat and Julia Snyder, as follows: Ann Minerva (Mrs. Thomas Payne), who died in August, 1903; David H., who died in March, 1905; Margaret, widow of James Irvin, who is at home with her mother; Mary, deceased, a twin sister of Margaret; John, John (II.) and George, all of whom died in infancy; Luella, who became the wife of Jesse Hale, and lives in Littleton Township; Laura F., who dwells under the paternal roof; Joseph William, whose home is in Sherlock, Iowa; and four others. The father of this family departed this life March 28, 1902. During the period of his activity he was a man of untiring industry and left a record for rectitude of conduct and a business career beyond reproach. The declining years of his faithful companion, who has been a witness of marvelous changes in Schuyler County since the days of her girlhood, are solaced by the tender care of her surviving daughters and the cordial esteem of many friends.

WHEELHOUSE, Robert.—The breeding of Shorthorn cattle, which, because of their value for beef and dairy purposes, forms one of the most paying and satisfactory of farming specialties, is being vigorously promoted in Rushville Township, Schuyler County, Ill., by Robert Wheelhouse, one of the early and successful farmers of the county. Mr. Wheelhouse, who was born in Yorkshire, England, November 13, 1822, has no recollection whatever of his native land, for when only four years old he was brought to this country in a sailing vessel by his parents, Robert and Hannah Wheelhouse, who settled in the wilds of Ohio, and turned their attention to farming on Government land.

Robert Wheelhouse was reared among surroundings which developed both his muscle and self dependence. His education has been largely self acquired, owing to the numerous tasks which confronted him in his youth, and which permitted his attendance at the subscription school of his neighborhood only irregularly, if at all, during the winter months. In 1845, at the early age of twenty-three, he married Margaret, daughter of Samuel Deweese, of Ohio, and five of the children of this union are living: Margaret, Caroline, Samuel, George and Robert. After his marriage Mr. Wheelhouse settled down to general farming in Rushville Township leading an uneventful life until the craze for gold during the middle of the last century created a general discontent with the slow and laborious methods of money getting. By no means immune from confidence in the opportunities thus presented on the Pacific coast, he made the long trip across the plains, with his wife and four children, during the summer of 1853, traveling in a covered wagon drawn by oxen, and enjoying the advantage of ample provisioning and equipment. On the journey the Indians often came to the wagon for food, and through the generosity thus extended, and the kindness exercised, he avoided many of the trials and dangers which beset the pathway of the early Argonauts. After five months of sleeping under the stars or in the rough wagon, the party arrived at the mines, where Mr. Wheelhouse secured work for a time, and eventually rented 300 acres of land along Feather River. This property was extremely fertile, and in consequence the western experience of the erstwhile miner was profitable and pleasant. He made a specialty of barley, wheat and garden truck, and his first barley and wheat crops consisted of 4,000 and 1,000 bushels, respectively. The garden truck covered a ten-acre patch, and contained all of the vegetables and small fruits which would grow in that part of the country. Regular mining prices prevailed, practically everything being sold by the pound at figures that would astonish the central western farmer of the present. All vegetables were five cents a pound, barley six cents and wheat the same, potatoes being sold in hundred-pound sacks at ten cents a pound. For these products, Mr. Wheelhouse realized about $1,000 an acre. During five years and three months Mr. Wheelhouse availed himself of this splendid opportunity, and at the expiration of that time, in the autumn of 1859, he set sail with his family for Panama, being twenty-three days on the water. There were 400 passengers, all homeward bound from the mines and farms of the Pacific States, and of these but twelve appeared for breakfast after the boat had gotten into the gulf. Crossing the Isthmus of Panama, the party landed in New York harbor on Friday, and the following Monday Mr. Wheelhouse started for his old home in Ohio, intent upon visiting the friends and relatives whom he had left behind in Licking County.

In the spring of 1859 Mr. Wheelhouse said good by to his friends in Ohio and journeyed to Schuyler County, loading his little family into a wagon, and during the trip camping by the roadside. He was in a position to start farming under the most favorable auspices, as he had done well in the West, and felt in fine humor with himself and the world in general. Taking up 140 acres of land, forty acres of which was in timber, and the rest under the plow, he began to build and purchase stock, starting with 33 head of sheep and 65 head of cattle, including four milch cows, for which he paid $7 a head, and some yearling steers which cost him $4 per head. In all ways he has added to his farming enterprise, until today he owns 420 acres of land, unquestionably as fertile and productive as any in the Central West. He has been one of the influential and prosperous farmers of the township, setting an inspiring example of industry, good judgment, good heart and good purpose.

1854, and of his mother, in 1857. There remain at present, however, three brothers and two sisters of the old family, and of these, John, a resident of Polk City, Iowa, is ninety-three years old; George is eighty-nine years of age, and lives in Rushville; Hannah, the widow of Benjamin Bryant of Des Moines, Iowa, is eighty years old; and Jane, widow of Dr. Thomas Campbell, lives in St. Louis, Mo. Mrs. Wheelhouse is the last of her family, her parents and one brother having died in Licking County, Ohio, where she was born January 11, 1827. Another brother, Samuel, died in Schuyler County. To Mr. and Mrs. Wheelhouse have been born the following children: Caroline, widow of Ezra Walker, living on the farm in Woodstock Township; Melinda, wife of J. L. Richey, also living on the old place with her husband and two children, Franklin and Margaret; Samuel (deceased), a former coal operator of Rushville, who married Jane Black; George, a farmer in Woodstock Township; Robert W., a farmer in Rushville Township, now operating coal lands owned by his father in Sections 18-19. Both Mr. and Mrs. Wheelhouse enjoy good health, and are unusually bright and active for people of their years. Association with younger people has kept their hearts young and their interest in life keen, and until about five years ago Mr. Wheelhouse could read the newspapers without his glasses. He is not a member of any church, but has always contributed generously of his means to churches and charitable organizations. He has been unwilling to serve the community as an office holder, but has staunchly supported the principles and issues of the Democratic party. He likes to look back to his rushing, busy days, when he kept up high standards of stock-raising, making a specialty of hogs and cattle, and at one time had a steer weighing 4015 pounds. One year he shipped sixty head of Poland China hogs, fifty-eight of which averaged 500 pounds, and on the market brought their proud owner $2,300. He has a pleasant, comfortable home in which to dream away the days of leisure, and although his farm is rented, he is still interested in its productive power, and the reputation which it enjoys among the finely developed properties of the county.

WHETSTONE, Marcus.—The qualities which have advanced Marcus Whetstone to a foremost place among the large landowners, influential politicians and prominent promoters of Schuyler County, Ill., are those which have aided the ambitious man in more or less degree since the beginning of time. Standing upon the foundation of unassailable integrity, good judgment and practical industry, this honored agriculturist must needs feel the only kind of satisfaction worth striving for, that of having been of unquestioned use to his fellow men. A man who, without special aids or opportunities in his youth, can so fashion his purpose as in the years to come to be able to bestow upon his progeny 680 acres of land, and keep for himself a farm sufficient for all his subsequent needs, has illustrated in truth the best benefits of life and labor and service.

Born in Adams County, Ill., March 6, 1838, Mr. Whetstone is a son of Abijah and Lucinda (Brunton) Whetstone, natives of the vicinity of Cincinnati, Ohio, and who were married in their native State. Moving first from Ohio to Indiana, the parents, in the summer of 1833, loaded their household possessions into a prairie schooner and came across the prairies to Schuyler County, drawing rein in the neighborhood of the present city of Rushville. Later, they took up their abode in the wilderness of Adams County, Ill., and in 1853, returned to Schuyler, again taking up their residence in Adams County, three years later, and still later, moving to Missouri, where the father died in 1888. Thereupon the mother returned to Augusta, Ill., and there spent the remainder of her life. She was the parent of eleven children, of whom three sons and four daughters are living. Of these, Mary was first married to William Seward, and later, to William Johnson, the latter also deceased; Melissa E. is the wife of Jacob Working; Maria is the wife of T. Farr; Eliza J. is the widow of John Willis; D. J. lives in Colorado; W. B. is a resident of Garden City, Kans.; and Marcus, of Schuyler County.

Educated in the public schools of Adams County, Marcus Whetstone worked hard to learn the business of farming, and at the age of 20 returned to Schuyler County, purchasing in 1858, at the age of twenty, 140 acres of land for $2,500. Today, after years of careful cultivation, this same property is worth eighty dollars an acre. Subsequently, Mr. Whetstone's father gave him 160 acres of land, all of which he improved and devoted to general farming and stock-raising. In time he added to his possessions until he owned 803 acres, all of it valuable and tillable land. Possessing far sighted business judgment, and directing wisely and practically his efforts, he has expected and therefore has succeeded, each season adding to his large store of money and experience, and advancing him to larger usefulness and influence in the community.

In 1863 Mr. Whetstone established a home of his own, marrying Clara Tarr, who was born in Schuyler County, a daughter of Jacob Tarr, a thrifty pioneer of Schuyler County, who, with his wife, is now deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. Whetstone have been born eight children, of whom three daughters and one son are living, as follows: Mary Ellen, widow of W. E. Melvin, and mother of five daughters and two sons; Mattie E., wife of Lewis King, a farmer of Huntsville Township; Hattie E., wife of Ray Blackburn, living near Brooklyn, Schuyler County; and James G. (operating his father's farm), who married Ida L. Hand. The present farm of Mr. Whetstone consists of eighty acres, and he has started his children out with generous endowments of land and money, besides all of the advantages, educationally and otherwise, which his means would permit.

Politically, Mr. Whetstone is non-partisan, voting for the man best qualified to serve the public welfare. While never seeking or desiring office, he has adapted himself to practically all of the local positions of honor, and among other responsibilities close to the needs of his fellow townsmen, served nine years on the Board of Supervisors. He is a remarkably charitable and benevolent man, and many in the county owe their early success to his encouragement and practical help. Much of simplicity and harmony has attached to his home, business, political and social relations, and a lesson in strength, endurance, honesty and concentration arises from the successful accomplishment of his life purpose.

WHITSON, George T.—In his struggle for the competence which enables him to live in comfortable retirement in Rushville, Ill., George T. Whitson has employed good judgment, honesty and perseverance. Many experiences have crowded into his life since he started out to make his own way in the world, at the age of twenty-two years, having worked until then with his father.

Born in Columbia, Lancaster County, Pa., September 14, 1829, his recollections of the Quaker State at best are dim, for in 1837 he came to Schuyler County, Ill., with his parents, Benjamin and Susan (Little) Whitson, settling on a farm near Rushville. Benjamin Whitson was born in Maryland, and his wife in Ireland, and the former died in 1867, at the age seventy years, while the latter lived to be eighty-four years old.

The limited resources of the family made it imperative that George T. Whitson contribute to their financial support as soon as possible, and he therefore abandoned his schooling at the age of sixteen and applied himself to learning the plastering trade, which he followed until his twenty-second year. The craze for gold at that time had reached its height throughout the country, and in 1852 he joined the great army of fortune seekers who were willing to suffer all manner of privation for the chance in the mines of the Pacific Coast. His was the success of the average rather than the exceptional miner, and upon his return to Rushville he again took up his trade as a safe and sure means of livelihood. In 1864 he made a second visit to the coast country, and in all, spent over six years in the West. Through his marriage to Ermine Patterson, of Kentucky, in January, 1856, Mr. Whitson allied his fortunes with those of another pioneer family, one which had also been established in Schuyler County, in 1837. Much of the activity of Mr. Whitson has been along political lines, and he has been a valuable adjunct to the local organization of the Democratic party. He was elected Sheriff of Schuyler County in 1872, and afterwards served as Deputy Sheriff for two years under the administration of George W. Campbell, and for four years under that of Felix Jackson. From 1881 until 1883, he was Deputy Circuit Clerk under W. H. H. Rader, and in 1898, he was elected Treasurer of Schuyler County. He is credited with investing all of these offices with dignity, and due regard for the welfare of the community which had placed him in office. In the face of circumstances which afforded ample opportunity for personal gain at the expense of principle, he kept his standard of official integrity high, and furnished no excuse for serious criticism.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Whitson are as follows: George A., carpenter and builder, who resides in Rushville; Carrie E., widow of George Bates, a resident of Peoria, Ill.; Laura A., wife of Charles Bassett, who lives in Valley City, N. D.; Susan M., widow of Joshua Parkhouse, whose home is in Los Angeles, Cal.; Louis W., of Valley City, N. D.; Frederick E., of Galesburg, Ill.; and Clifford G., deceased.

In January, 1864, Mr. Whitson joined the Masonic Fraternity, and there is but one member of Rushville Lodge who has been longer connected with it than himself. He served the lodge as Secretary for more than fourteen years, twelve and a half years of this period being consecutive service.

WHITSON, Wilbur F.—The firm of Whitson & Son, established in 1880, and composed of Wilbur F. and James W. Whitson, is one of the largest concerns in Schuyler County, Ill., for the breeding of Jersey cattle. Preceding the business organization of 1880 were the years of effort of Wilbur F. Whitson, pioneer, and senior member of the firm who was born in Columbia County, Pa., September 16, 1836, and who, when a year old, was brought up the river to Frederick and from there the father walked, the family being conveyed in a wagon. He first worked at his trade, that of a plasterer, and then bought 80 acres in Buena Vista Township. He took up his residence in Rushville in 1849, living there until his death. Benjamin Whitson was born in Harford County, Md., and his wife, whose maiden name was Susan Little, was a native of Ireland. Mrs. Benjamin Whitson died in 1890.

Mr. Whitson was educated in the public schools of Rushville Township, and his youth was spent among the crude conditions which made the way of the pioneer a hard and self-sacrificing one. Several years of his life were spent in a rude log cabin, which his father erected in the wilderness during the fall of 1840, and he was taught to make himself useful around the farm at an age when most boys of today think their time should be given up to play. Thinking that he had outgrown the farm he turned his attention to learning the plasterer's trade, but finding work with the trowel too confining, he returned to farming with renewed appreciation of its freedom from restraint and independence. He has developed one of the finest properties in Schuyler County, has excellent buildings, fences and general improvements, and the seeker might travel far and not find so interesting and valuable a collection of gentle, beautiful faced Jerseys. His farm contains 235 acres of land, with ample facilities for conducting the large Jersey-cattle business, which has brought himself and son into the lime light of agricultural publicity. He has taken premiums for his stock at State and county fairs, and is also extensively engaged in the breeding and sale of Poland-China hogs, Southdown sheep, of which he has fifty head, and Plymouth Rock chickens. There are no better fowls of this kind to be found in the State, or any that bring higher prices for breeding purposes. The entire place is spirited in its enterprise and progressive in its tendencies, and a model of what may be achieved by a definite purpose and high agricultural ideals. The stock raised on this farm are never allowed to fall below grade, and each and every animal which makes its way to the market is regarded as an advertisement, and a good one, for the firm it represents.

In 1858 Mr. Whitson was united in marriage to Alice Taylor, who died in 1861. His second wife was Eliza (Bellamy) Whitson, whose death occurred in 1904. James W. Whitson is the father's only child. Mr. Whitson never has sought the honors of political office, although he staunchly supports the Democratic party. In religion he adheres to the Methodist Episcopal faith. He is one of the wealthy and influential men of Schuyler County, having a reputation for fairness, progressiveness and public spiritedness. He is personally very popular, and enjoys the good will and companionship of a large circle of friends. The changes that have taken place during the past seventy years have been carefully noted by this large hearted and successful stock-man, and for at least fifty years he has been an active factor in bringing about the present prosperity. Three score years and ten find him the possessor of a cheery disposition, a well balanced mind, and a memory stored with facts which are indispensable to the complete history of Schuyler County.

WILLARD, Burton O.—A practical demonstration of the results obtainable by a union of singleness of purpose, good judgment and large capacity for industry is found in the career of Burton O. Willard, a legal practitioner of Rushville, Ill., since March, 1895, Chairman of the Republican County Committee since 1900, member of the State Board of Education since 1902, and Ex-City Attorney. Mr. Willard is a product of the farming contingent of Littleton Township, Schuyler County, Ill., where he was born June 14, 1868. His remote paternal ancestors pursued their avocations in England, and the family was first represented in America by his paternal great-grandfather, Samuel Willard, who settled in Massachusetts. George Willard, the paternal grandfather, was born in Boston, and married Rachel Garrett, a native of the Hoosier State. Patrick Willard, father of Burton O., was born in Browning, Schuyler County, Ill., and married Anna G. Garrett, a native of Kickapoo, Ill., Mrs. Willard was a daughter of John Garrett, born in Lexington, Ky., in 1830, and Sarah E. (Williamson) Garrett, born in Wheeling, W. Va.. Her grandparents, Thomas J. and Susan (Wagoner) Garrett, were born in Lexington, Ky.

Educated primarily in the public schools of Illinois, Burton O. Willard next entered the Rushville Normal College from which he was graduated in 1891. From the age of twenty-one to twenty-four he both taught and attended school, at the same time taking up the study of law, which resulted in his admission to the bar November 22, 1894. Since attaining maturity he has been increasingly enthusiastic over Republican politics, and locally has proved one of the staunchest and most popular supporters of his party. In 1896 he was the unsuccessful candidate for State's Attorney, and in 1897 was elected City Attorney, serving two terms. In 1900 he became Chairman of the Republican County Committee, in which capacity he now is serving his third term. He was appointed to the State Board of Education in 1902 by Governor Yates. In 1900 he represented the Fifteenth Congressional District in the Electoral College.

August 31, 1892, Mr. Willard was united in marriage to Ida Barton, a native of Coopers-town, Ill., and of the union there is a son, Paul B. Mr. Willard is fraternally a Mason, and in religion, is a Presbyterian. During the eleven years of his residence in Rushville, Mr. Willard has maintained the highest tenets of his profession, and has proved himself a judicious and faithful counselor, and a genial companion, considerate friend and high-minded gentleman.

WILLIAMS, Wilburn L.—A recent adjunct to the business life of Rushville is the photographic studio of Wilburn L. Williams, a young and enthusiastic follower of an art which is increasingly interesting and broadening. For the greater part, Mr. Williams' thirty years of existence have been spent in Pana, Ill., where he was born in 1875, a son of Wade Hampton and Huldah (Briggs) Williams, the former a native of North Carolina, and the latter of Missouri. The elder Williams at present is making his home in Mount Sterling, Brown County, Ill.

Wilburn L. Williams was educated in the public schools of Pana, and after graduating from the high-school, took a course in a business college in Springfield. In the latter city, he served an apprenticeship to a photographer, and thereafter worked at his trade in Chicago, whence he came to Rushville in 1905. Already he has established an encouraging business and has met with a generous response from a community glad to welcome within its boundaries whatever shall tend to its greater growth and enlightenment. He has natural artistic tendencies, developed by constant research and experience, and understands to a nicety the subtleties of lights and shadows, the possibilities of arrangements and the emphasizing of characteristics through posture and expression.

In Lincoln, Neb., in 1898, Mr. Williams was united in marriage to Mildred Carnahan, and of the union there is a daughter, Helen. Mr. Williams is a consistent Democrat, but not inclined to either seek or accept official honors. A genial personality and keen desire to please are among the business qualifications which promise increasing success to this popular promoter of artistic photography.

WILSON, Thomas (deceased).—No personality which invaded the infant community of Rushville in the later 'thirties erected a more enduring monument to foresight and business sagacity than did that of Thomas Wilson, farmer, merchant, banker, churchman, and all-around promoter of stable community conditions. For seventy years, the firm of Wilson & Company has been a central and compelling necessity around which has gathered in turn, all of the other commercial and industrial enterprises, and nearly all of the residences which comprise the town of Rushville, and it is not known that any other business concern in Schuyler County has had so long and continuous a tenure of activity. One reads in its ebbing fortunes practically the entire history of the settlement. Its first modest housing, its few commodities, its subsequent enlargement and its present prosperity, are all landmarks merrily pointing to the law of demand and supply which controls business interests the world over. The oldest living settlers never heard of a more jolly meeting place than this old store of other days; no larger crowds gathered anywhere, outside the church, than used to settle upon its cracker boxes and barrels and counters, to warm themselves at the ruddy stove and settle, after vigorous and sometimes physical persuasion, the weighty questions of local or national import. Mr. Wilson himself was the presiding genius of the establishment for more than half a century, and carefully guarded its growing importance from 1837 until his lamented death, in 1898.

Thomas Wilson was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, in 1812, and in the same county were born his parents, Thomas and Jane (Greer) Wilson, whose marriage was solemnized in 1801. Thomas Wilson, Sr., was born in 1768, and to him is due the distinction of being one of the first in that part of Ireland to unite with the Methodist Church. His task of promoting that faith was not an easy one, for there was much opposition in the conservative neighborhood. Mr. Wilson was a farmer by occupation and, according to the standard of wealth prevailing in the community, was in fairly prosperous circumstances. His son and namesake was reared also to farming, but early felt the limitations by which he was surrounded, and which, seemingly, had satisfied the ambition of his father. At the age of twenty, he took a decided stand in regard to his future, left all that he held dear behind him, and came in a sailing-vessel to America, reaching Philadelphia in the fall of 1832, after a tempestuous voyage of seven weeks. After a brief sojourn in Philadelphia he went to Lancaster County, Pa., then to Allegheny County, in both of which places he worked as a farm hand and saved a little money. Later making his way to Pittsburg, he found various kinds of employment, and there married, on September 18, 1834, Susan Clarke, daughter of John Clarke, with whom he continued to live in that city until 1837, when, during the summer of that year, he brought his wife overland in a wagon to Schuyler County, Ill., and at once established the business with which his name ever since has been connected. He had a hard, uphill fight at first, but he was a shrewd buyer, a keen observer of the trend of affairs, and an instinctive judge of human nature. What drew him to this locality is a matter of conjecture only, but he seems never to have hesitated in his plans or, at any time in his career, to have regretted his course. He drew the horoscope of the locality with great foresight, and the community may be said to have lived up to his expectations. His business placed on a secure footing, he sent to the old country for his father, mother and other members of his family, but the mother sickened and died on the journey, and the reunion of which he so long had dreamed was therefore incomplete. The father made his home with his children in the county, and, at the time of his death in December, 1854, was living with his son Joseph, then a farmer in Hancock County, Ill.

By 1870 the fortunes of Mr. Wilson had assumed such substantial proportions that, recognizing the need of a conservative banking establishment, in conjunction with James G. McGreery, he established the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Rushville, which continued until 1874, when the business was closed and all accounts paid in full. When the Bank of Schuyler County was established in 1890, Mr. Wilson became one of the largest stock-holders and first President, serving until his death in 1898.

While merchandising and banking consumed the business energy of Mr. Wilson, he was no less active and influential in church and social matters. He was one of the pillars of the Methodist Church, was a constant attendant and contributed generously of his means to the advancement of church interests. He was a generous and public-spirited citizen, and many who were once downcast and discouraged owe their start in life to his sympathy and practical assistance. His home was one of the hospitable places in the county, and the friends who visited it and partook of the bounty of the merchant and his whole-souled wife, were legion. Having sufficient of this world's goods, no one ever went from his door empty-handed. There were few local enterprises of a worthy nature which did not, in some way, profit by his connection, and the names of those he helped in his capacity as a merchant are unnumbered. He was liberal with his credit, and lenient with belated debtors, and his patrons, who were temporarily in hard luck, were sure of at least the necessities of life.

The three children now living of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson are: Anna Jane, the wife of James P. Clark, a retired merchant of Springfield; John C., who is a large land-owner and lives on a farm adjoining Rushville on the east; and Amelia, the wife of John L. Sweeney, present owner of the dry-goods establishment founded by Mr. Wilson in 1837, and which is still operated under the firm name of Wilson & Company. Eleanor, a gifted and beautiful daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, after completing her education at Monticello Female Seminary, at Godfrey, Ill., returned to her home, was taken ill with a baffling disease, and died at the early age of twenty-two. She had been the joy and sunshine of the household, a student of the highest standing at Monticello, and was greatly beloved for her gentleness of disposition and sweetness of character. Sarah E., the deceased wife of H. B. Graff, passed away in 1882, leaving a family of four children, two of whom are now living: Wilbur W., a mining engineer, of Ishpeming, Mich., and John C., a partner of Graff & Co., Grain Merchants at Rushville, Ill.

Of this pioneer merchant of Rushville, too much cannot be said in recognition of his noble and generous character, or of the incalculable benefit to humanity and the community conferred by his life and work. Sufficient that he left a fragrant and helpful memory, and that his name is enshrined among the real workers and the true men of the city of Rushville.

YARBROUGH, James.—The rise from obscurity to wealth and influence of James Yarbrough is represented by the extremes of chopping wood and rafting by the day, and owning, through individual effort and good judgment, 553 acres of splendid land in Schuyler County, Ill., located on Sections 24, 35 and 26, Camden Township, and Section 13, Buena Vista Township. The experiences of this well known and highly honored farmer have been diversified in the extreme, and to say that he has profited by them all is to attribute to him that ambition and resourcefulness which have been the guiding elements of his career. A resident of Schuyler County for the past thirty-four years, Mr. Yarbrough's earliest impressions were received in Trimble County, Ky., where he was born September 7, 1842, and of which his parents, James and Mary (McPike) Yarbrough, were also natives. James Yarbrough, Sr., was born in Kentucky, March 16, 1804, the son of William Yarbrough, also a native of that State and member of a pioneer family. He went to Missouri with his son, James (J.) and entered land there, but died in Kentucky in the 'fifties, his wife dying later in the same State.

Mary (McPike) Yarbrough, wife of James Yarbrough, Sr., and mother of the subject of this sketch, was born December 1, 1801, the daughter of Edward and Sarah (Van Cleve) McPike, the former born March 15, 1772, and the latter, March 14, 1780. The Yarbroughs were of German descent, while the McPikes were of Irish ancestry, and both families were closely identified with frontier life in Kentucky. Some of the cousins of Mrs. Mary (McPike) Yarbrough were captured by the Indians and held in bondage for a considerable time. Finally, having been allowed the privilege of hunting and making it a practice to venture a little farther from the camp each day, in time they succeeded in making their escape.

In 1854, the family of James Yarbrough, Sr., moved to the vicinity of Palmyra, Marion County, Mo., and there his death occurred in 1858, only four years after going to that region. His wife, who survived him until 1863, was the mother of seven children, four of whom are living: William, in Marion County, Mo.; Mary, widow of John Pryor, of the same locality; Lucy, widow of William Scott, of Audrain County, Mo.; James, of Schuyler County, Ill.; Sarah, deceased wife of Jephtha Lake, who is also deceased; Thomas, who was killed at a house-raising at the age of fifteen; and Nancy, who died at the age of four years. The father of this family was a man of quiet tastes and disposition, a lover of home, wife and children, and a friend and pioneer of the sturdy, dependable sort.

James Yarbrough, Jr., was twelve years of age when he accompanied his parents and the rest of the family to Missouri, and there, as in his native State, he attended the subscription schools until his sixteenth year. He then began to work by the month for farmers in Marion County, and in 1862, with a neighbor by the name of Garrett, came to Adams County, Ill., to cut timber by the day. In the spring of 1863 he came to Schuyler County, and began cutting wood for a Mr. Ingles, but later, building a raft just below Ripley, on Crooked Creek, floated the same to the Illinois River, and thence down the Mississippi to St. Louis. He continued in this occupation, in connection with Mr. B. H. Ingles, with fair financial success, until his marriage, November 29, 1864, to Elizabeth J. Ingles, daughter of B. H. Ingles, his former employer and partner. Mr. Ingles came from Kentucky to Schuyler County, where he was one of the early pioneers. After his marriage, Mr. Yarbrough rented a farm of Chris Briggie, in Woodstock Township, a year later renting another farm, and continuing as a renter in Illinois until his removal a second time to Missouri in the summer of 1869. Then purchasing a farm, he tilled the same until disposing of it in 1871, when he returned to Schuyler County and rented land in Camden Township. About 1874, he bought a 100-acre tract of land in Section 26, Camden Township, which was improved, having on it a small frame building. With this insufficient nucleus, he set about creating an ideal country home, and that he succeeded almost beyond reasonable expectations is apparent to all who stray within its borders. He has continued to add to his holdings until he now owns 558 acres, all of it tillable and under a high state of cultivation.

The first wife of Mr. Yarbrough died in September, 1881, leaving only two of her seven children living: Annie, wife of Charles Unger, of Rushville, and mother of Edna Belle; and Bartlett, a farmer of Camden Township, who married Fannie Greene and has two sons,—Paul and James. In March 1882, Mr. Yarbrough married J. Edwena Unger, and of their union there were seven children: Edward E., Charles W., Lucille, S. Lillian, Lawrence U., Grover and Arthur J. Edward E., married Bertha E. Race, of Camden, Ill., on June 13, 1904, resides on a farm in Camden Township, and has one child, Elva Edwena; Charles W., is assisting in the management of the home farm; Lucille is a graduate of the Rushville Normal and Business College, and is one of the handsomest and most accomplished young ladies of Schuyler County, a splendid entertainer and an excellent cook; Grover died at the age of two years; and Arthur J. barely survived his second year. In political affiliation, Mr. Yarbrough is a Democrat, and though always averse to office-holding, has served acceptably as Assessor of Camden Township. He is one of the very active and progressive men of his community, and has done much to promote high class stock-raising and scientific general farming. His farm is a model of neatness and thrift, and his standing as a man and farmer is unexcelled.

YOUNG, James Henry.—James H. Young, assistant cashier of the Bank of Rushville, Schuyler County, Ill., is one of the most promising financiers and young business men of the locality, besides being an officer and stock-holder of the institution named, having farming and other interests of considerable magnitude. He was born on the home farm near Rushville, Buena Vista Township, Schuyler County, on December 10, 1876, and is a son of John Alexander and Mary (Clark) Young, being the fourth child. His father was a man of such importance in the development of the county that a review of his life is published in another part of this work.

The mother, formerly Mary L. Clark, is the youngest of a family of the children born to the Rev. John and Ann (Obern) Clark, both natives of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. The father was an able and prominent minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in 1891 was elected President of the Ohio Conference, which met in Cincinnati in June of that year. He was sent west to secure the location of the Dearborn College, which was finally founded at Lawrenceburg, Ind., and in 1843 came to Rushville, Schuyler County, bought land in the vicinity, and made the locality the headquarters of his work. He remained a highly honored resident of Buena Vista Township for many years, his death occurring at Detroit, Mich., and his remains being brought home and buried in the cemetery near Rushville, where also reposed the body of his wife who had died February 2, 1887.

Rev. John Clark was the son of John and Eleanor Clark, who were natives of County Tyrone, Ireland, and with their parents were ardent adherents of the Reformation under John Wesley. Under its influence their family were raised, and in 1814 the family removed to Pittsburgh, where the son, John, received the most of his education under the careful tutelage of his father, who for several years was a professional teacher. On November 16, 1826, Rev. John Clark married Ann Ohern, and the following year entered the traveling ministry of the Protestant Methodist Church, in which he filled some of the most important stations, being chosen delegate to each of its General Conferences while he remained identified with that denomination. After locating in Schuyler County, in 1843, he united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, continuing to work as a traveling missionary, and for a number of years served as pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church at Rushville. On May 18, 1896, he passed to his heavenly reward, and in his death the church lost one of its strongest members and the county one of its revered citizens.

James H. Young was reared upon the home farm near Rushville, and early attended the district school, afterwards attending public school at Rushville, and the Normal and Business College, and graduating from the last named institution in the class of 1895. Immediately thereafter he entered the employ of Roach & Tetrick, and continued in their service and in the employ of their successors for five years, resigning then to accept the position of assistant cashier of the Bank of Rushville. In 1908 he was one of the organizers of the Schuyler County Fair Association and became its first secretary. He has been an indefatigable worker in matters of public interest and few young men have built up a more extended acquaintance.

On September 26, 1891, Mr. Young was united in marriage, at Chicago, Ill., to Elizabeth Frances Patterson, daughter of James Marsh and Mary (Hamilton) Patterson, born at Jacksonville, Ill., on July 24, 1875. One child resulted from this union, namely: James Russell Young, born July 10, 1903. The parents are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mrs. Young is an accomplished and refined lady, and the pleasant family residence on West Washington Street has in her a presiding mistress who has made it the center of much high-minded sociability. Mr. Young is also a cultured and sociable gentleman, as well as careful, honorable and enterprising. He is a Republican in politics, and in 1897-1898, served as Alderman of the First Ward of the city of Rushville (his election to this office being almost unanimous), and proved a careful and efficient public official. Fraternally, he is identified with Schuyler Lodge, No. 209, K. of P.

YOUNG, John Alexander.—Four generations of the Young family have promoted the industries and shared in the stimulating life of Schuyler County, Ill. The first of the name to believe in the rare possibilities of this part of the State was John Young, an ambitious young Irishman who bled away from his verdant isle with a purpose both strong and splendid, and a courage which utterly failed to recognize the ordinary obstacles of life. Landing in New York after a tempestuous voyage, he made his way to Philadelphia, and after a brief sojourn there, undertook the long journey by water, stage and ox-team to Rushville, Ill., where he found warm welcome from a small number of settlers who had braved the dangers from Indians, game and the terrible cold of long winters. So pleased was he with the prospects in the new country that he sent for his parents in Ireland, and when they arrived went to live with them on the farm which they purchased in Buena Vista Township. The oldest of four children, of whom the others were named William E., Alexander, Margaret and Elizabeth, he helped to till this early farm with the crude implements known to the general western farming population of the latter 'twenties and was soon united in marriage, at Rushville, Ill., to a daughter of Hugh McCreery, a native of Ireland, who had accompanied him to America. The young people went to housekeeping in a small log cabin with scant furnishings, and with practically none of the comforts and advantages of the present time, planned for a systematic unfolding of their dreams and hopes.

It was not given to John Young to realize his expectations to any appreciable extent, for death claimed him February 8, 1835, three years after the birth of his son, John Alexander Young, June 14, 1832. His youngest child, James M., died in infancy.

From early boyhood John Alexander Young was self-sustaining, and in his search for work on various farms belonging to neighbors and relatives, he was often separated from his mother. However, when arrived at about sixteen years of age he was in a position to take his mother back to the old place upon which his father had settled in 1832. Ambition called him in 1852 to the far western coast, where he lived for six years, and was engaged in mining, agriculture and merchandising. He went to the gold fields in an ox-train, taking about six months to span the distance between the Missouri line and the Mecca of his fortune-making expectations. He achieved reasonable success, and returning to the East by way of Panama and New York City, stopped for a visit with his friends and relatives in Philadelphia. Again in Schuyler County, he resumed agricultural pursuits, and made many fine improvements on the time-honored old farm. Originally consisting of 130 acres, he sold twenty acres to defray his expenses to the coast, but later added to his possessions until he owned 580 acres in one body. The farm was well stocked and housed and under a high state of cultivation. Mr. Young devoted much time and study to the breeding of high grade stock, and his farm was the local headquarters for all that was fine and dependable in this department of country activity. He had a large herd of Short-horn cattle, fine horses and hogs, and raised besides the general products associated with the soil and climate of the Central West.

He was a studious and ever progressive landman, and established and maintained a high standard of country life and work.

October 13, 1869, Mr. Young was united in marriage to Mary L. Clark, daughter of Rev. John Clark, and born in Schuyler County, Ill., April 1, 1847. She was a broad-minded, sympathetic, Christian woman, devoted to her family and friends, and of inestimable help to her husband in the acquiring of his substantial competence. Her death, May 15, 1878, was regretted by the entire community, for her hospitality and unflinching kindness had drawn to her an unusual degree of respect and appreciation. November 24, 1881, Mr. Young married Elizabeth DeWitt, daughter of James DeWitt, an honored pioneer of Schuyler County. Mrs. Young was born in Littleton, Schuyler County, May 22, 1855, and had the average advantages of the young people of her time and place. She is the mother of five children: Mary Euphemia, born in Rushville, September 19, 1882, wife of Frank Hare, of Rushville; John DeWitt, born April 5, 1894; Dwight McCreery, born September 28, 1885; Ellen Little, born April 16, 1888; and William Hugh, born April 26, 1893. By his first marriage Mr. Young had four children: Carl Clark, Anna Florence, Sarah Eleanor, and James Henry. Carl Clark, born August 9, 1870, married Lillian Crandall, May 26, 1897, and is engaged in the real estate business in Kansas City, Mo.; Anna Florence, born August 3, 1872, was married at Rushville, September 5, 1901, to Joseph Edgar Neff, a graduate of DePauw University and for years assistant principal of schools of Rushville, who died in South Bend, Ind., March 12, 1905; Sarah Eleanor, born August 23, 1874, was married May 6, 1896, to James H. Nell. She has three children,—Mary Eleanor Nell, born in Rushville, September 11, 1897; Florence Lillian, born March 18, 1899, and Edna Maxine, born May 6, 1903. James Henry Young, born in Rushville, December 10, 1876, was married in Rushville, September 26, 1901, to Elizabeth Frances Patterson, of Chicago, daughter of James Marsh and Mary (Hamilton) Patterson, born July 24, 1875, and mother of James Russell Young, born July 10, 1903.
